THE WABASH AT CONSTANTINOPLE.

A New-British Treaty with Japan.

LATER FROM INDIA AND CHINA.

Manners, and at last resolved to abolish the transit dues in the States forming the Zollverein.

The Austrian Cabinet was said to be treating with the Turkish Government for the cession of a port in the Sea of Marmora to the Austrian Lloyds.

The Prince Regent had taken the oath prescribed by the Constitution, before both Houses, and the Parliamentary session was thereupon brought to a close.

The official journal at Madrid, Espana, had considered it necessary to deny the rumored project of an O'Donnell Dictatorship.

It was stated some time ago that the Government had resolved to postpone the projected expedition against the Riff pirates until after the conclusion of the Mexican affair; but the semi-official journals now state that the appointment of Lieutenant-General Fano to the command of an expedition has been definitely agreed to, and that the number of troops to be engaged in it is to be 12,000. In spite, however, of this very positive affirmation, a letter from a Ministerial source declares that "nothing whatever has been definitely settled on the subject." The steamer Pizarro had left Alicante with troops for Cuba.

The Constantinople correspondent of the London Times, writing on the 16th October, says:

"The fine American frigate Wabash, the arrival of which I noticed in my last, has caused no small excitement at the Porte, as well as among diplomatists. It seems no one was aware of the size of the vessel, and according to the wording of the application which was made at the Porte for her passage through the Dardanelles, a vessel of small size was expected. Of course she is a relative idea, and probably what is large at Stamboul may look small in New-York. As America is not a party to the treaty which favors 21 guns as the limit of the size of any man-of-war allowed to pass the Dardanelles, I don't know whose idea of large and small will ultimately prevail; in the meantime the frigate is the lioness of the Golden Horn, and unless the diplomatists resolve to sink her under the weight of their disputations, I am afraid it will be rather difficult to move her out of the comfortable position which she occupies in the teeth of treaties and Ambassadors."

The Ambassadors of France, England, Russia, Austria, Prussia and Sardinia protested, as they considered the entrance of this 54-gun frigate into the Bosphorus a violation of the Treaty of Paris.

A Constantinople telegram, of the 16th, says: "The United States Legation obtained a firman to admit only a corvette. On the appearance of the Wabash, the Porte drew up a protest, a copy of which was sent to the Ambassadors of the great powers, and the American ship prepared to withdraw."

A message to the India House, dated Bombay Sept. 27, contains a few additional items of news.

The Gwalior rebels were still at Seronge, but it was thought that they would make an attempt to cross the Nerbudda, between Saugor and Bilsa.

A successful attack on a body of rebels numbering about 8,000, posted on an island of the Gogra, took place on the 19th of September. They were driven out of their intrenched position, with, it is reported, the loss of 1,000 killed. The artillery fire did great execution among the fugitives, and also sunk two boats laden with the enemy. Two of the rebel leaders are reported to be among the slain. The British loss was not severe.

The Bombay Presidency remained quiet.

The Calcutta mail of Sept. 23 had been telegraphed from Malta, but the advices generally were anticipated via Bombay.

An earthquake had been felt at Akyab.

The Calcutta produce market was active, but imports were dull. Freights were lower. Money abundant. Sterling Exchange, 2s. 0¾d.@2s. 0⅞d.

At Madras the markets were dull. Tonnage was abundant, and freights low.

Hong Kong dates, by telegraph via Malta, are to the 11th of September.

No political news is given. Trade was dull. Exchange on London, 4s. 4d.@4s. 5d.

At Shanghae (Sept. 2) little was doing either in exports or imports. Silk was firm. Exchange, 5s. 11d.@6s. 9½d.

At Canton trade was stagnant.

At Macao (Sept. 9) there was a fair business doing in tea. Freights were tending downward.

At Foo Chow (Aug. 21) there was increased activity in tea.

At Singapore (Sept. 28) imports were active, and produce was in good demand. Exchanges, bank bills, six months, 4s. 4½d.

The Times announces that Lord ELGIN had made a satisfactory treaty with Japan, and had returned to Shanghae.

Difficulties between France and England.

A telegram dated Lisbon, Oct 25, says: "This morning, at 7 o'clock, the ship Charles et Georges was restored, and the captain (ROUXEL) set at liberty. The exact amount of indemnity that Portugal has engaged to pay on the requisition of the French Government, is not yet fixed."

The indemnity from Portugal had, it was said, been reduced to 168,000 francs.

The Moniteur officially confirms the statement that the Charles et Georges had been restored and her captain liberated.

The Paris Patrie says the indemnity has been paid by Portugal without arbitration, but this requires confirmation.

The manner in which the question was settled had called forth the indignation of the English Press in general.

The Times, in a leader on the subject, says:

"Never was the voice of truth and justice more arrogantly overpowered by a mere superiority of physical force—never were the rights of a brave and independent nation more recklessly trampled upon—never was the understanding upon which the affairs of Europe, since the peace of 1815, have been conducted more entirely cast to the winds; for Portugal is left but to fold her arms and record her protest against the violence to which she has been forced to submit. For Europe, there remains a precedent fraught with danger." The Times inquires whether the English Government has exerted any moral influence in favor of Portugal, and says: "Have we interceded for her with our great ally? Have we strengthened her with the assurance of our approbation of the honorable course she has adopted, and promised her that in case of extremity we would not forget the duties imposed by our treaty obligations? She has done her duty; we should be glad of some proof that we have not been wanting in ours." The Times thinks a second most lamentable result of the affair is that France can no longer be counted upon as among those nations who are bent upon discouraging in every manner the continuance of the Slave-trade.

The Daily News says: "Portugal is entitled to the sympathy of all civilized Powers, and the censure of Europe will deservedly fall on the Emperor of the French and his Ministers."

The News, referring to the refusal of France to arbitrate, adds:

"And this course France has pursued in spite of and notwithstanding two considerations; First, that in a case of dispute not very dissimilar between Portugal and the United States relative to a ship called the General Armstrong, the differences on that occasion, which at one time threatened a rupture, were at last mutually referred to the arbitrament and decision of no other power but France herself under its present sovereign; secondly, that this is exactly such a case as comes under the principle of reference adopted by the great Powers of Europe in the Conferences of Paris; and it is the utter disregard of that principle on the first occasion to which it was applicable that is calculated to give so deep an offence to Europe. In its place we have an overweening arrogance, and a pernicious violence, brought to the solution of a political difficulty, which go far to persuade us that, be the Empire what it may, it is not the rule of Peace based on Justice."

Reviewing the conclusion of the affair, the Manchester Guardian observes:

"What part England has taken in this matter we have yet to learn. Till Parliament meets, we certainly shall know nothing of the course pursued by our Ministers; but then they must render an account of their doings. Well will it be for them if that account is such as will satisfy the honor of the country. If they have not used their utmost endeavors on behalf of our ally and of the common cause of humanity; if they have not protested solemnly against this violation of international law and national rights; if they have stood by unremonstrating to see Portugal threatened—and threatened for resisting the Slave-trade in her own waters—then they will speedily learn the lesson which was so forcibly given to their predecessors, that, however highly Englishmen value the alliance of France, they are not disposed to endure insult and knightly from her ruler for the time being; and that no English Government may venture to disregard the national sensitiveness on a point of honor and of public duty. If they have promptly given every assurance which could be given, short of actual war, to an ally whose England can never consent to abandon, they may maintain the reputation they have won for vigorous assertion of the national honor, and may at least retain the popularity which they acquired in the case of the Cagliari. And if not, not."

Case of the Mortara Boy.

Two very contradictory accounts are published respecting the Mortara affair. The first is the Armonia of Turin, which is the one commented on by the Paris Débats, is given in the following letter from Rome:

"It was with the greatest delight that this child received the Consecrat of the Catechumens. On arriving there he observed over the gateway a statue of Notre Dame-de-Douleurs. 'Why does she weep?' he asked. 'She weeps,' he was told, 'because the Jews do not become converted, and will not recognize her.' 'Then,' replied the child, 'she weeps for my father and mother!' He understands what happiness it is for him to be a Christian; what an extraordinary kindness was conferred on him when he received baptism, and what a misfortune it is for his parents to be and to wish to remain Jews. This idea is deeply impressed on his mind and still more so on his heart. When the visit of his father was announced he was delighted, for the Catholic religion, far from extinguishing filial love, renders it stronger by sanctifying it. He, moreover, pictures to himself that he may convert his father and make him a Christian like himself. This was his hope and he frankly manifested it. But having seen his father, and finding him deaf to all his prayers he began to weep bitterly. This child is as firm in the faith as an apostle. His father asked him to return with him to Bologna, saying, 'Why do you not come with me? Have you forgotten the commandment, "Honor your father and mother?"' The child remained for a moment pensive, and then replied, 'The Pope knows the commandments better than you and I. I shall do what he says.' He knows his catechism well, and makes his profession of faith in the most complete and exact manner. He insists on this point, that the Jews have neither altar, nor Holy Virgin, nor Pope. He says that he would wish to convert them, and, from his accent it is clear that it is grace which speaks. The Pope expressed a wish to see the child, and was delighted with him. He blesses the servant who had him baptized, and thus effected his entrance to the Catholic Church. He was asked who the Pope was; he replied, 'The Vicar of Jesus Christ;' and who was Jesus Christ? was added. The child blushed, and said, 'Jesus Christ is the Savior of men, and whom the Jews crucified.' And it is wished that a child of such a lively faith should be given up to the Jews! It would be a cruelty, and the most manifest violation of that principle of liberty of conscience which the Liberals have always in their mouths. The young MORTARA finds at Rome, and in the Catholic Church, the protection which is necessary to him to be able to profess his faith freely, and to instruct himself in the duties of his religion. It is not at Rome that violence is used, and that attempts are made to convert Israelites by force. Compared rather to that of young MORTARA are rare, for such striking triumphs of grace are seldom seen. Besides, no one have raised the slightest opposition, and the parents themselves are satisfied at seeing their child educated in the convent where he has been placed."

The other account, in a letter from Bologna, is of a very different cast:

"It is completely false that the father can see his son freely. He may have been able to see him, but it was in the presence of the rector of the Catechumens, and the child always declared that he wished to return to his father and mother. When MORTARA left Rome, he was promised that, in his absence, the secretary of the Israelite Commission of that city should visit his son. But when that gentleman presented himself at the convent of the Catechumens, not only was he refused admission, but the rector cried to him from one of the windows that, after the return to Rome of the Cardinal Inspector of the Catechumens, formal orders had been given not to receive any Israelite, and that this prohibition extended even to the parents. The rector of the Catechumens did still worse. About the end of last month the little EDGAR was, by his order, taken for a walk in the streets of the Ghetto, either to annoy the young girls who are to be seen there mending their rags, or to make an impression on the mind of the boy himself by contrasting the comfort of his position with the poverty of those unhappy people. These petty acts of malignity lead me to relate another. To avenge themselves for the horror which this abominable act has caused in all Europe, our authorities have given orders to the director of the Piazzo Maggiore Theatre to place in the mouth of his marionettes once a week language of hatred against the Israelites, in order to arouse religious fanaticism. But our town has manifested calm in presence of these provocations. Such are the expedients that are had recourse to. Men of sense say that the affair was an error committed by Cardinal VIALE PRELA; but it is right to observe that the Inquisition does what it pleases, and listens to no counsels, being certain that no one will dare to contradict it."

A Paris letter in the Memorial d'Aniens says:

"I have just learned that a member of the Mortara family has arrived in Paris from Rome. It is said that, prior to his departure, he had an audience of the Duke DE GRAMMONT, the French Ambassador."

The London Times thinks that the people of England need not trouble themselves about "the Blessed Baby of Bologna,"—first, because they have no relations with Rome, and therefore could not meddle in the matter; secondly, because the whole question is one totally beyond the sphere of English ideas, and foreign to anything that could arise in our own social state; thirdly, because the Pope and the child-stealers would be perfectly deaf to any moral appeal; and, fourthly, because the Jews are rich, united and love their tribe, are high in the councils of Emperors, know that even Popes and Cardinals are not independent of their aid, and they will no doubt succeed in getting the child restored to his parents.

The Times adds:

"The first thing that strikes the reflecting mind is, what an awkward thing it would be, according to this theory, if the passion for baptizing inveluntary Jews were to extend itself among housemaids, or any other class of the community! Young MORTARA was made a Christian by an act to which he was not capable of assenting himself, and which was not assented to by his parents. He was neither able to answer for himself, nor did he have godfathers or godmothers to answer for him. Ergo, baptism is valid if performed on one who has given no consent, and it may be performed by any one—even a woman. What, then, is to prevent some imitator of the Bolognese handmaiden from running a muck through the Ghetto of the Eternal City? A strong-limbed and active young woman might baptize some twenty Jews before she could be secured. The most stalwart of her Hebrew captors might find himself a Christian in a moment if she got one of her hands loose. What would be the legal position of these victims of a spirited Propaganda? Would they be at once sent off to the College of the Catechumens? Would they be locked up on Saturday to keep them from synagogue, and marched off the next day to Church between two files of Papal infantry? It will be seen that the sacramental doctrine carried out into practice would be productive of some social inconveniences."

A British Appreciation of the Americans.

From the London Times, Oct. 26.

It is difficult to keep up a fast friendship with a man who has frequent fits of the gout, or a chronic toothache, or an excoriated epidermis. He may be a very valuable man to know, and au fond he may have a real affection for you. But you can never be quite free and unconstrained in your companionship with him. You are always afraid of coming a little too near his gouty toe, or opening a window and letting in a cold draft that may set his teeth and temper raging; if you poke ever so gentle a bit of fun at him, it is not certain he will not throw his crutch at your head; and if you nudge him playfully in the ribs, he is almost sure to scream and abuse you. He may be almost overwhelmingly offensive in his moments of intermittent good humor, but suddenly comes that twinge in the toe, and down go the corners of his mouth, or that wrack of pain, and up goes his hand to his face, and then he becomes touchy and testy and quarrelsome, and you are tempted to say, "Confound the fellow, I'll let him alone. He's a capital companion when in good humor, and there is no one I'd rather have by my side in case of a fight; but he is so crotchety and uncertain that I can never be sure that I should have him on my side. If we got into a mêlée he would be just as likely to break my head as that of one of our antagonists;" and thus you grow more polite and less friendly, and your hot-tempered friend, who represented your familiarities, chafes at your indifference.

Will our newly-made neighbors on the other side of the Atlantic, now only just a cable's length off, pardon us if we apply this paustic reflection to them? Not that we would for a moment insinuate that they, in their body politic, are afflicted with gout or with toothache; for our fat-footed young friend strides with the tread of a juvenile giant, and his grinders are so hale that, having munched up half a new world, he is rather suspected of indulging gastronomic designs upon other portions of it. In fact, if he has a fault in respect of his teeth, it consists in just a little too much fondness for showing them. But there is something rather wrong about our friend's skin. The oil of human kindness in which he was dipped was a little too hot, and has scalded off the outer cuticle. His sensations seem to be rather akin to those of the ancient invaders of England, morsels of whose skin are still under the nail-beats of our old church doors; or to those of that ill-used saint who stands, in we forget which continental cathedral, draped in his own flayed-off hide. He quivers to every touch; and but that his muscles are large and his strength and temper are dangerous to any one not unlocking the friendly operations, a good healthy tar and-feathering would do him a world of good. It is our own fate always to be in a difficulty with our sturdy friend. We can never be quick enough to meet his hot fits of affection, or to get out of the way when the boot-jack and the gout-stool are flying across the room. We are always doing something to conceal his gushing sympathies or to heighten his ill-temper. The New-York Morning Courier takes us to task for this our misconduct, in a spirit of courteous admonition, which, as it is not very common on the other side of the Atlantic, may not be passed over without the courtesy of a reply. Our Transatlantic remonstrant, after a general charge of ancient grievances, which, as they are not specified, cannot be refuted, does us the justice to admit that the Times, when speaking of "our country and its institutions, has usually done so in a fair spirit." Well, that is something. We have not been false to the fundamentals of friendship. We may have thought it a matter of duty to tell him we thought he was rather sharp in foreclosing the mortgage on that Mexican's estate, or that he must not disgrace himself in the eyes of his county by stealing that Spaniard's tobacco-box, or that he ought to keep his sons from riding over his poor neighbors, or that we should be obliged to him not to poach more than he could help in our fish-ponds, and we have even gone so far as gently and meekly to hint a complaint to him of the nuisance arising from the cries of that black servant whom he is always thrashing. We have never, it is true, done any of these things without putting him into a terrible passion, but we cannot in our innocence think we were in fault; for even the indictment against us admits that he and his family have always been treated with due respect, and that even our friendly remonstrances have been made in a fair spirit. Our new crime is, however, we can feel, almost unpardonable. We have made a mistake about that Transatlantic telegraph. Cousin Jonathan intended to be sublime, and we in our error fancied he intended to be ridiculous. We unhappily mistook his patios for bathos. He entertained us with a performance which he intended to be most affecting, and we had the misfortune to think it was a farce which he meant us to laugh at. So we poked our little bit of fun at him in return, and with due promptitude the gout-stools and the boot-jacks came flying about our ears; next morning came the more formal and courteous epistle to which we are now replying. Now, our New-York contemporary is much mistaken if he supposes that the people of England were not quite as much pleased at the apparent accomplishment of an instantaneous communication between the two nations as the people of America were. There was some promptitude in the royal message; a condescension which could only be inspired by strong interest and a strong hope was manifested by the buyers who ran the shares up to par on the Liverpool Exchange; and we cannot think that we ourselves were wanting to the occasion. We took the best means in our power to secure a clever and graphic history of the operation, and if our English ship-of-war had foundered in the tempest we should have had our own special cause for mourning; we celebrated the success with as much glorification as we soberly could, and it is not much more than a month since we quoted from the New-York papers acknowledgments to the Times for being the only paper which, on the day of the arrival of the news, had devoted a leader to the subject. How far we may be entitled to that distinguishing praise we do not know; it was given us, and we quote it, therefore, against the donors. But we did laugh. The fact is not to be denied. But how could we do otherwise? If New-York had piped to London any rational tune, London might have danced to it; but "Yankee Doodle" was played so fast and loud that no English Doodle could keep time to it. The outward expression of great joy were strange to our island humor. The "Young Men's Democratic Union Club, accompanied by a chorus band," serenading Mr. FIELD was an oddity in our eyes. Some of us have seen real serenades at our opera houses, but when the idea is suggested of a middle-aged gentleman roused from his sleep and struggling into his clothes in order to appear upon a balcony to be played to by votive male admirers equipped with fiddles and mouth-organs, our English gravity is overtaxed and will explode. Then, when the last scene came, and the illusion ended with the combustion of the City Hall, and when we were entertained with the appearance of the Mayor of New-York at the end of the performance, facetiously announcing that the Lord Mayor of London had, in a higher strain of joyous frenzy, ordered the London Mansion-House and the Palace of Westminster to be lit up as a responsive bonfire, no one could have imagined that we were expected to keep countenance under pain of being accused of "laughing at American enthusiasm."

Let us ask the New-York Courier, did not the more sober people in New-York smile long before we laughed? And, now that a little time has gone by, do not the actors in this odd demonstration laugh at their own folly betwixt whiles of their wiser and sadder labor of building up their City Hall? Let us assure our too sensative kinsmen that we only mirror the sentiments of the English people when we treat in a fair spirit both their country and their institutions; and that if we scold their errors, withstand their encroachments, and laugh at their extravagances, we can yet respect their power, honor their good qualities, and put high value on their friendship.

Comities of Free and Slave Labor.

The London Times has an article on the industrial contrasts between Free and Slave labor in the West Indies. It opens the discussion with the following general remarks:

"The subject of Slavery ought to be understood in our day. Different people may take different views of the facts, and of the consequences to be deduced from them, but at least the facts—that is to say, the data of the Slavery discussions—should have been long since ascertained and established. Upon some leading points, indeed, we in England are agreed; but this agreement of opinion is confined to the limits of the four seas. In the United States the battle as yet is one of first principles. The French Government for a long time past has been endeavoring to renew, under another name, the practice which has been long since condemned by the public opinion of the country. Spain, bound by endless treaty engagements to aid in the repression of the Slave-trade, is, in point of fact, the great supporter of the system. Now, in England, we say that the Slave-trade shall no longer be permitted to exist in any quarter of the globe if by negotiation or by arms it can be repressed. Slavery shall not exist in our own dominions,—that is a municipal matter, entirely within our own control; but the Slave-trade shall not be carried on elsewhere if we can put it down. In the case of the United States, indeed, we are compelled to content ourselves with the assurance that the American cruisers will do the work. Will any one, however, say that it is not mainly to the ceaseless exertions—to the philanthropic energy—to the persuasion to the persuasion of this country that the Anti-Slavery party in the States owes its strength? Blot out England, and English sympathies, and English power from the map of the world, and the battle between the North and the South would be fought on the other side of the Atlantic on very different terms. So far, then, as this, Englishmen are at one with each other on this question—Slavery shall not be in our own dominions, nor the Slave-trade anywhere, if we can help it. Could we have gone one step further, and annihilated the 'peculiar institution' in all other countries as well as in our own, the problem would, in the main, have speedily received a satisfactory solution. This, however, was beyond our power, and, consequently, we find ourselves in this anomaly—the parent of many anomalies—that we, without a slave population, must compete in the markets of the world with other countries which have slave populations, and that with respect to tropical produce. We are not now about to discuss the policy of the Free-Trade Sugar Act; we merely notice it as a feature in our statement, in order that we may say that England has taken high ground indeed upon the question. She has said that naked and alone, without differential duties or Custom-house mechanism of any kind to back her in the struggle, she will stand the brunt of the fight, and wage the battle of free labor versus slave labor against all the world. Under these circumstances it is necessary to consider if the contest be a possible one under existing arrangements; if not, how it can be made so without tampering with that great principle which has now become incorporated with the national existence of the Three Kingdoms."

NEWS BY TELEGRAPH.

INTERESTING FROM WASHINGTON.

The Alliance between General Walker and J. L. White—Position of the British Government Explained—The Management Pronounced Seaworthy—Condition of the Treasury, &c.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, Nov. 9.

General WALKER and J. L. WHITE are constant companions, and understand each other well. It is hinted that the passengers on the steamship Washington are filibusters. WISE says that as the Government here would not protect him, he found it necessary to protect himself. JESUP offered him the Vandyke contract, but he refused it, believing his present contract valid.

There is no truth in the ridiculous report that our Government has officially noticed the card of Gen. JESUP warning persons against taking passage on the steamship Washington.

The position of the English Government relative to Nicaragua, is now distinctly understood here. Filibusters, or "Walker emigrants," will not be permitted to land at Greytown, or on any part of the Mosquito Coast, so long as England holds even a nominal protectorate there—which may be but a very short time, as Sir WM. GORE OUSELEY is instructed to surrender this country to Nicaragua, upon the negotiation of a treaty. Again, England will prevent any overthrow or interruption of the present de facto Government of Nicaragua during the pendency of Sir WILLIAM's negotiations. This she will do of her own free choice, and then she will afterwards render Nicaragua any assistance she may ask for in repelling invasion. Thus far, however, Nicaragua has asked no aid from the British Government.

The whole question of our Central American relations is becoming every day more complicated and interesting; the new league formed between General WALKER and J. L. WHITE is not the least suggestive of what we may anticipate. Some of Mr. WHITE's particular friends here who have been urging war upon WALKER, are not a little astonished at the new alliance.

Later.—General WALKER remained over to see General HERNSHEIM, who arrived this afternoon in response to a dispatch from WHITE. The great filibuster chiefs have a meeting to-night, when old feuds are to be settled. I also learn that Senor VERGARA is one of the filibuster firm, and is to grant passports to WALKER's "emigrants" who ship on WHITE's steamers. MARCHES should look to his laurels.

The officers appointed to examine the steamer Matecomet report her seaworthy, and she will at once proceed on her voyage to Paraguay.

The National Hotel was on fire yesterday, through the carelessness of a servant, but the flames were extinguished without serious damage to the building.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, Nov. 9.

The receipts into the United States Treasury for the quarter ending Sept. 30, were twenty-five and a quarter millions, and from the loan ten millions of dollars. The expenditures were upward of twenty-two millions, including over eight millions for the army and four millions for the navy.

The emigration party designing to sail for Nicaragua have, it is stated, on what is believed to be good authority, been invited there by the Democracies, to make common cause against the new Constitution. Hence a revolution is confidently anticipated, and, as one of the results of its success, the return of the ratified Cass-Yrisarri Treaty.

The American Atlantic and Pacific Canal Company have complained to the State Department of JUAREZ's interference with their affairs, to their detriment. It is stated that a letter has accordingly been prepared, satisfactory to the Company, addressed to the Nicaraguan Envoy.

An arrangement was to-day concluded between ROBERT A. PRYOR, editor of the Richmond South, and Major HERIS, editor of the Washington States, by which their respective journals are to be consolidated into one paper, and published in Washington, in an enlarged form. It is to be the organ of no person or clique, but devoted to the general interest of the Democratic Party, in accordance with the principles of the State Rights Democracy.

The following Passed Midshipmen have been warranted as masters in line of promotion: Messrs. Porcher, Hopkins, Sicard, Matthews, Buchanan, Law, Lull, Lee, Crossman, Norton and Dalton.

The 25th of November will be observed as a Day of Thanksgiving in Washington.

THE HON. ERASTUS CORNING AND THE PRESIDENT—HOUSE OF THE GOVERNOR ELECT—THE BOY MURDERER ROGERS.

ALBANY, Tuesday, Nov. 9.

The rumors that have been circulated respecting ERASTUS CORNING and the Secretaryship of the Treasury are unfounded. Mr. CORNING is understood to have been called to Washington in consequence of the desire of the President to consult him in relation to the Iron interests, in contemplation of a revision of the tariff, and also in relation to the plan for the construction of the Pacific Railroad, both of which movements it is supposed are to be promptly initiated by the Administration.

The Governor elect, the Hon. E. D. MORGAN, has leased for the Gubernatorial term, the elegant mansion of ROBERT TOWNSEND, Esq., corner of State-street and the Capitol Park. He returns to New-York to-night.

The mother and sister of the boy-murderer ROGERS had a long interview to-day with Governor KING, but he will not interfere to prevent the execution of the law.

Murder Trial in Newark.

NEWARK, Tuesday, Nov. 9.

The trial of JAMES MCMAHON for proceeding in the Court of Oyer and Terminer in this city. Some difficulty was had in impanneling a Jury, but, after exhausting nearly the whole panel, twelve competent men were secured. Very few of the Jury are of this city. Evidence is now being offered on behalf of the State—the motion made by the counsel of the prisoner to quash the indictment not being sustained. The evidence is very clear and conclusive. We understand it is the determination of the prisoner's counsel to carry up the case by a writ of error, in case the verdict should prove adverse.

INTERESTING FROM WASHINGTON.

The Alliance between General Walker and J. L. White—Position of the British Government Explained—The Management Pronounced Seaworthy—Condition of the Treasury, &c.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, Nov. 9.

General WALKER and J. L. WHITE are constant companions, and understand each other well. It is hinted that the passengers on the steamship Washington are filibusters. WISE says that as the Government here would not protect him, he found it necessary to protect himself. JESUP offered him the Vandyke contract, but he refused it, believing his present contract valid.

There is no truth in the ridiculous report that our Government has officially noticed the card of Gen. JESUP warning persons against taking passage on the steamship Washington.

The position of the English Government relative to Nicaragua, is now distinctly understood here. Filibusters, or "Walker emigrants," will not be permitted to land at Greytown, or on any part of the Mosquito Coast, so long as England holds even a nominal protectorate there—which may be but a very short time, as Sir WM. GORE OUSELEY is instructed to surrender this country to Nicaragua, upon the negotiation of a treaty. Again, England will prevent any overthrow or interruption of the present de facto Government of Nicaragua during the pendency of Sir WILLIAM's negotiations. This she will do of her own free choice, and then she will afterwards render Nicaragua any assistance she may ask for in repelling invasion. Thus far, however, Nicaragua has asked no aid from the British Government.

The whole question of our Central American relations is becoming every day more complicated and interesting; the new league formed between General WALKER and J. L. WHITE is not the least suggestive of what we may anticipate. Some of Mr. WHITE's particular friends here who have been urging war upon WALKER, are not a little astonished at the new alliance.

Later.—General WALKER remained over to see General HERNSHEIM, who arrived this afternoon in response to a dispatch from WHITE. The great filibuster chiefs have a meeting to-night, when old feuds are to be settled. I also learn that Senor VERGARA is one of the filibuster firm, and is to grant passports to WALKER's "emigrants" who ship on WHITE's steamers. MARCHES should look to his laurels.

The officers appointed to examine the steamer Matecomet report her seaworthy, and she will at once proceed on her voyage to Paraguay.

The National Hotel was on fire yesterday, through the carelessness of a servant, but the flames were extinguished without serious damage to the building.

PROSTITUTION IN NEW-YORK.

There was a time in City chemistry when it was a matter of doubt whether there were any traces of Arsenic to be found in the body of a woman who had died and been buried full a year before. Facts recently developed had raised a suspicion that she might have been a victim of premeditated poisoning. The chemist had the body disinterred, and, with his assistants, spent a month in the horrible enterprise of analyzing every portion of it. With much the same feeling that must have been experienced by the chemist, the moralist girds himself to the nauseous but necessary task of analyzing the subject of Prostitution. This vice—as old as History—has kept pace with society in all its progress. The chief trade of savages, it is degrading Civilization. It has demoralized every nation, and, with the diseases that flesh is heir to, has swelled its train. It has impaired the physical constitution of every nation, and rendered puny, weak and effeminate the offspring, whose natural advantages, resources, and cultivation, entitled them to be the foremost among the children of men. How to be rid of it has puzzled the ingenuity of the eternal moralists, the sagacity of the shrewdest politicians, the care of the wisest legislators; but, as the pestilence of our own times and all countries show, utterly without success. Its blight is more deadly now and more general after centuries of honest and anxious effort to conquer it, than when America was discovered; and simple and sage, with equal impotency, deplore the growing ruin which none are blind enough not to see.

The question of suppression being, then, indefinitely postponed—not, Heaven knows, because it ought not to be suppressed, for that it ought all concede, and that it must be before this world in its moral beauty will harmonize with its mental and physical perfections—the next effort, of course, must be to inquire whether by the interference of law Prostitution cannot be put under such restrictions that it shall not stalk openly abroad in the face of society, by its unblushing familiarity shaming virtue and touching vice to the pure. At least so much is due to the innocent, that it shall not be allowed, by unnecessary publicity, to become familiar, to suggest thoughts, folly and passions in hearts not yet contaminated. It is a more delicate question to settle—how far Law, which in its impotence to forbid, still has a duty to regulate, and by its regulations which unfortunately seem to tolerate, may confine it within certain limits, subject it to police and sanitary surveillance; in fact circumscribe its acknowledged territorial limits for the sake of quarantining syphilitic diseases. The question is not a new one, although in this country it has not been much mooted. Here the doctrine has been—because the evil and its alarming extent, but the very publication of its extent almost excite the curiosity of the young to dwell on topics which youth cannot entertain without harm. They cannot touch pitch without being defiled—was the theory, and the best method was thought to be to turn away with disgust from matters which seemed to carry infection in the atmosphere. Like the corpses of those dead with the plague, which even the anatomists and undertakers shunk from, they have been left to vitiate and corrupt all the air. Such a policy, of course, has signally failed to check the growth of prostitution, and New-York to-day labors under a stigma of harboring within its borders a vile horde of men and women who, directly or indirectly, live by the proceeds of their unholy pandering, greater in number than the population of some of our most flourishing inland cities. Whether our metropolitan reputation for corruption and profligacy is quite deserved, may perhaps be discovered from the statistics presented in this article upon authority that is conclusive.

We confess it doubtful whether any considerations of public policy would have sufficed to direct our attention to this topic at this time but for the appearance of a large and pretentious volume upon the subject which has just been issued by the HARPER BROTHERS, in their best style. This work is entitled "The History of Prostitution—its extent, causes and effects throughout the world—being an official report to the Board of Almshouse Governors of the City of New-York, by WM. W. SANGER, M. D." If such a work were called for, Dr. SANGER was doubtless the man of all others called upon to write it. He stands at the head of the Lying-in Hospital on Blackwell's Island, which for years has been the only recognized public hospital of the City where patients of all grades suffering from syphilitic diseases could be received or cured. To this Hospital wretched men and women of the town were utterly broken down with disease were compelled to go. Meanwhile there was no access to it but through the prison gate;—it was a Penitentiary Hospital, and hundreds guilty of no crime except the savage crime against their own bodies, welcomed the warrant of commitment to the Penitentiary for two, three, or six months, which was the only passport to the Hospital. Nay, even reputable women of unstained virtue, suffering from diseases communicated by faithless, brutal husbands, denied access to any other Hospital and unable to bear the enormous expense and the risk of charlatanry in private treatment, went to the Tombs, served themselves falsely as common vagrants for the sake of the accommodation, were classed with thieves, blasphemers, prostitutes, and then when restored to health obliged to bear the ignominy of their place for the rest of their miserable existence. This condition of affairs disgraced our City, shocked our humanity, but certainly made the Blackwell's Island Hospital the great emporium and point of congregation of syphilitic diseases. The physician in charge could not walk the streets of New-York an hour without meeting a former patient, and must of necessity have seen pass under review a longer procession of the unfortunate victims of their own ungoverned passions and of innumerable diseases than any other man in the Commonwealth.

The book was undertaken at the suggestion of some of our Almshouse Governors, and must have occupied a very large share of the author's leisure for many years. For the facts that render it most valuable he had the aid of the Police of the City, and they are no doubt substantially reliable. For a very large portion of it he has drawn upon the abundant sources of which, unfortunately, so Alexandrian fire purified the world, the Erotic literature of Greece and Rome; the poets who, by their satire, made known and perpetuated the unnatural and unnatural crimes they satirized; the dramatists who, in obscene plays, held the mirror up to nature in her most depraved attitudes; the libidinous novelists, of whose works not one page can pass into even the liberal hands of the easy moralists of to-day and not be condemned as outraging decency; and the fables, mythologies and records of Olympian and terrestrial scandal, of which all that it can be profitable for us to know is, for the mortification of our vanity, that our great ancestors and their gods came with their lives disclosing the whole catalogue of human experiences, and our own humanities need no admiration, that in spite of encrusting degradation and brutalizing sin, we have still retained the upright form and some of the goodly lineaments of the image of God. Of this part of Dr. SANGER's book, which has the merit of being purely and simply written, and in a style not to offend the most fastidious, though on every page detailing facts and methods of lewdness of the most disgusting order, we are free to admit that we cannot see the use. It was a work of supererogation to reproduce every style and device of ancient indecency; it gave no new impressiveness to the author's lesson—added no new force to his conclusions; while it detracts from the obvious benevolence of his motives and makes his work unfit for the perusal of large classes who would have been benefited by a chaster production. His plan leads him to narrate the history and the details of prostitution in each important nation of the globe from the earliest times to the present. If the plan was necessary the author has fulfilled it with success. The scholar, cursed with a prurient imagination, will gloat over the passages which the wiser tutor of his collegiate days left untranslated for him; the busy collector of nasty passages will be astounded to find ready collated the stories which he hunted through hundreds of dusty and condemned old books to find; but the honest and conscientious reformer will blush and shudder as he sees this unnecessary parade of the method of that madness which possessed and ruined the moral sense of the ancients, and which—but that the monster disease lues venerea, which ancient morality pictured as the chief torment of the hell of the sensualist, was only centuries after fished up from hell and stationed on earth to give the pursuers of unhallowed pleasures a foretaste of the horrors that awaited the unrepentant—which, we say, but for this tardy arrival among the crew of mortal maladies, must have left long ago the whole human family in its physical appointments and organization a wreck and an utter ruin. Leaving all this portion of the work, which will make it welcome in brothels, we turn to that part which states facts that, shocking as they must be to all delicate and refined minds, it is profitable for virtue, though with averted face, to hear, and for all who have the public weal at heart to know.

When Dr. SANGER determined to enter upon this work, he decided as a preliminary measure to take a complete census of prostitution in this City. For this purpose he prepared a schedule of questions, and obtained the aid of Chief MATSELL and his Captains of Police to secure answers to them. It embraced inquiries as to the number of houses of prostitution, the number of prostitutes, the causes that induced them to adopt this life, their ages, birth-places, early history, education, religious instruction and occupation. From the voluminous returns to these inquiries, Dr. SANGER deduces some very important conclusions. He sums them all in the following recapitulation:

There are six thousand public prostitutes in the City of New-York.
The majority of these are from 15 to 25 years old.
Three-eighths of them were born in the United States.
Many of those born abroad came here poor to improve their condition.
Education is at a very low standard with them.
One-fifth of them are married women.
One-half of them have given birth to children, and more than one-half of these children are illegitimate.
The ratio of mortality among children of prostitutes is four times greater than the ordinary ratio among children in New-York.
Many of these children are living in the abodes of vice and obscenity.
The majority of these women have been prostitutes for less than four years.
The average duration of a prostitute's life is only four years.
Nearly one-half the prostitutes in New-York admit that they are or have been sufferers from syphilis.
Seduction, destitution, ill treatment by parents, husbands or relatives, intemperance and bad company, the main causes of prostitution.
Women in this City have not sufficient means of employment.
Their employment is inadequately remunerated.
The associations of many employments are prejudicial to morality.
Six-sevenths of the prostitutes drink intoxicating liquors to a greater or less extent.
Parental influences induced habits of intoxication.
A professed respect for religion is common among them.
A capital of nearly $4,000,000 is invested in the business of prostitution.
The annual expenditure on account of prostitution is more than $7,000,000.
Prohibitory measures have signally failed to suppress or check prostitution.
A necessity exists for some action.
Motives of policy require a change in the mode of procedure.

Citizens who have been accustomed to have the place of their residence reviled as the Modern Babylon—as scarcely less corrupt and licentious than even that City of the Plain whose name has come to be the synonym of whatever is most disgustingly sensual and beastly—will be surprised to see the number of prostitutes put no higher than 6,000. During the prostration of business which followed the great panic last Fall, a gentleman stated in a public meeting in this City, that a thousand virtuous girls were becoming prostitutes every week through sheer starvation! TAIT, in his work on prostitution in Edinburg, basing his statement on the exaggerated reports of the late Rev. Mr. MCDOWELL, asserted that New-York furnished a prostitute for every six or seven of its adult male population. But the gross exaggeration of such reports needs no exposition. The means by which Dr. SANGER obtained his census makes it entirely reliable. If so, the comparison in this respect with other great cities is not so much against us as has been supposed. The proportion of prostitutes in New-York and its suburbs is as one to every 117 inhabitants of all ages.

In Liverpool	1 to 86	In Glasgow	1 to 194
In Manchester	1 to 225	In Dublin	1 to 220
In Leeds	1 to 76	In Cork	1 to 247
In Edinburg	1 to 236	In Paris	1 to 250

But even this number must seem astounding to the pure. Placed side by side, this array of the lost would extend 2 miles and 240 yards. In single file up Broadway, allowing 36 inches to each person, it would stretch from the City Hall to Fortieth-street. It would require 500 omnibuses, holding 12 each, to convey them. But, vicious as New-York is, let it be remembered that this aggregate drains its suburbs of their impurity; that a house of ill-fame in Brooklyn or Jersey City would be quickly rooted out by the Police, and that from 5,000 to 20,000 strangers visit the City daily to share this obloquy and contribute their quota to its cause.

It is a matter of much interest to learn whence comes this polluted array. It has been some sort of salve to our conscience to presume that the vast majority were from abroad—imported women of Irish and German birth. But three eighths of the whole number prove to have been born in the United States. Of the 2,000 who answered on this point, 762 were born here. Of these, 394 were natives of New-York; 77 of Pennsylvania; 71 of Massachusetts; 69 of New-Jersey; 42 of Connecticut; 24 of Maine; 18 of Rhode Island. New-England gave birth to 172; the Middle States to 566; the South to 12; the West to 12. Rhode Island sends one of every 8,000 of her total population; Maryland only one of every 28,000. Of New-York's own contribution, a very large number never fell; they drew their first breath in dens of infamy, and never for a day breathed the atmosphere of a circle where purity was prized. But, far the largest number of these unfortunate victims are the children of the emigrants, of those who, from their birth, have inherited the curse of their parentage. Of the 2,000 born abroad, 703 were Irish, 187 Germans, 104 English, 52 Scotch. More than 45 per cent of these had not been 5 years in the country. Many were sent here by foreign authorities and societies to get rid of them,—members of the hopeless and dangerous classes, or victims of seduction at home. Others were honest at home, but were supplied with too little money to reach an honest destination in a strange land. The majority received only $40, or less, to make the passage and pay the expenses of settling here. These have first the risks of a tedious detention in Liverpool, then the temptations of the middle passage and the steerage. Even if they escape these, they are landed penniless in New-York, and become in their utter destitution the easy victims of false friends, sharpers, land-sharks, boarding-house keepers, who watch and labor for their ruin, as vultures wait for the carcase—as devils strive for the possession of the doomed. The late law of Congress, making a common practice of the sailors, and even the officers of emigrant passenger ships a penal offence, if enforced by the prompt action of the Courts, will do much toward reducing the foreign element of New-York prostitution, while the new arrangements by which emigrants who do not desire to stop in the City are received at Castle Garden and forwarded without delay or contact with harpies, has already told upon it, with the happiest effects.

This miserable army still bearing the remains of much beauty in its ranks, is to an alarming extent an army of youth, for youth is marketable in this infernal trade. Three-eighths of the whole number are between 15 and 20 years of age, and three-eighths more are between 21 and 25. Seven out of eight are not 30 years old. But one year of the life of these daughters of excitement is full ten years of common wretchedness. Premature age awaits them at the very beginning—an age whose ravages no artificial excitements, no cosmetics can long conceal. Some very few of them are educated,—accomplished,—generally the children of luxury, seduced and deserted. Far the greater number are ignorant of every department of worthy knowledge. In the Penitentiary Hospital in 1857, there were 175 of good (common) education, 754 wholly uneducated. Of 2,000 in the City, 714 could read and write their names,—scarcely more than one in 500 could do more than that;—546 could read and write imperfectly; 219 could read but not write, and 521 could neither read nor write.

It will be no small comfort to nervous parents, who in weakness and good faith do the best they can for their daughters, while they never cease to shudder at the fate that may await them, to feel that a sensible education, which at the same time inspires with self-reliance and developes the conscience, is a very great protection. Many girls no doubt adopt loose habits under the discouraging impression that in their utter ignorance they can make no head in the world—where skill and education are so essential to success that they have no chance to win in the battle of life.

Houses of ill-fame furnish withering rebukes to tippling parents—and reconcile total abstinence from strong drink to such as begin to doubt the virtue of their temperance. Of 2,000 prostitutes who were questioned, 1,252 reported that their fathers drank more or less intemperately; 921 confessed that their mothers drank; but in both cases the moderate drinkers outnumbered the immoderate. Concerning prostitutes there is one general rule—all drink. Not one per cent practise their calling without partaking of intoxicating liquors. Among the more aristocratic, absolute intoxication is held disgraceful. Yet champagne is always sold in the more pretentious houses, and in lower quarters gin is the common drink—a gin compounded not of simple alcohol, water and juniper berries, as it is honestly adulterated, but chiefly of spirits of turpentine and alcohol,—and the vile stuff furnishes as desperate an excitement, and as thorough a stupefaction, as any purer liquor. They need the fire of liquor in their veins to outburn and pale the fires of conscience. Their day is one perpetual succession of drinking, excitement, and dreams. In the expensively-furnished houses of the upper class, where the visitors are mostly profligate men of wealth, the profanity is not loud, nor is obscene language always heard. The inmate who pays $16 a week for her board, spends her day in sleep, novel-reading, and cards, and her night in the wildest fury of intoxication, finds the natural end of her brief career in a degradation to a cheaper house, where the charges for board are less, and which is principally visited by clerks, mechanics, and strangers from the hotels. Her next passage is to the third-class of houses, which empty their inmates upon the streets at dark, bedizened with finery, and dressed in the extreme of the latest fashions, to toll simpletons to their dens, where the panel game is deeply played, and where thieves largely resort. They suffer untold brutalities from the bullies who live on their earnings, and from the violence of reckless rowdies, as the police reports constantly show. Her next descent is to the dance-house, of which PETE DAWSON'S, lately made famous in the newspapers, is the type, and from which, not because of bars and bolts, but of overwhelming debt, and loss of mental energy, and of hopelessness, escape is almost impossible, except to the Penitentiary. Many of them spend more time in the Penitentiary than out of it. Fond, to the last, of liberty, they shun the commitment which gives them a decent prison home, but when released, soon find their way back again within the walls. If death is slack in fetching relief, they get at last to the Almshouse, or abruptly end their career by suicide. Two-fifths of all who were questioned confessed that they were suffering from syphilitic or other diseases of the same nature, and the actual facts are very far worse than their confession. Will any wonder, considering their constant mental and physical torture, their horrid, fiery drinks, their suffering under the most tormenting disease ever permitted to rack and ravage the frame, that they are short-lived? The average duration of the prostitute's life, after beginning her career, does not exceed four years. One-fourth then, or 1,500, die yearly in our City—and who ever has lived here four years has seen a whole generation of them disappear. Probably not one of the painted procession in Broadway to-night, four years hence, will be out of her dishonored grave.

This estimate far exceeds their mortality in Paris. M. PARENT DUCHALETEL found that of 3,517 prostitutes, 242 had led that life upward of 14 years, and 641 for more than 10 years. In Paris, 6¼ per cent survived the horrors of courtesan life 14 years; in New-York only 2½ per cent. The health of abandoned women has deteriorated in late years. Facts compel to the conclusion that commerce with prostitutes in 1857 was attended with nearly twice the risk of infection that was incurred in 1854. To this should be added the fact that during the past year, 74,000 cases of venereal disease were treated in New-York privately, either by competent physicians or by charlatans, or publicly in hospitals. Nor must the virtuous be filled with pity only—they have need of alarm. It is no common poison like that of yellow fever, killing outright its victims—or, unleaving them, leaving them to a perfect convalescence. This subtle mischief hides itself in the bones—and protrudes its ugly marks in the next generation. The innocent children of foolish parents are tainted with it to the third generation. No repentance expels this leprosy from the blood, but the father who sinned in his youth and never repented his folly may give to his sea a stain and a weakness which lessens throughout his life his vital force and impairs his physical stamina. It is not a question for the vicious alone. Those who have held that it was a special curse upon such as surrender to passion, find that by intermarriage with parties deemed untainted, the darling members of their own families are crippled and poisoned. If in the sketch of the chemist, if in the materia medica, if in the precepts of morality, the influence of education, the whole number of these unfortunate victims of the seducer, of the emigrants, of those who, from their birth, have inherited the curse of their parentage, be taken out of the City, what a change would be made! Of the 2,000 emigrants, of those who come from other cities, of those who have lived here but a few years, and have inherited the curse of their parentage, what a change would be made! Of the 2,000 born abroad, 703 were Irish, 187 Germans, 104 English, 52 Scotch. More than 45 per cent of these had not been 5 years in the country. Many were sent here by foreign authorities and societies to get rid of them,—members of the hopeless and dangerous classes, or victims of seduction at home. Others were honest at home, but were supplied with too little money to reach an honest destination in a strange land. The majority received only $40, or less, to make the passage and pay the expenses of settling here. These have first the risks of a tedious detention in Liverpool, then the temptations of the middle passage and the steerage. Even if they escape these, they are landed penniless in New-York, and become in their utter destitution the easy victims of false friends, sharpers, land-sharks, boarding-house keepers, who watch and labor for their ruin, as vultures wait for the carcase—as devils strive for the possession of the doomed. The late law of Congress, making a common practice of the sailors, and even the officers of emigrant passenger ships a penal offence, if enforced by the prompt action of the Courts, will do much toward reducing the foreign element of New-York prostitution, while the new arrangements by which emigrants who do not desire to stop in the City are received at Castle Garden and forwarded without delay or contact with harpies, has already told upon it, with the happiest effects.

This miserable army still bearing the remains of much beauty in its ranks, is to an alarming extent an army of youth, for youth is marketable in this infernal trade. Three-eighths of the whole number are between 15 and 20 years of age, and three-eighths more are between 21 and 25. Seven out of eight are not 30 years old. But one year of the life of these daughters of excitement is full ten years of common wretchedness. Premature age awaits them at the very beginning—an age whose ravages no artificial excitements, no cosmetics can long conceal. Some very few of them are educated,—accomplished,—generally the children of luxury, seduced and deserted. Far the greater number are ignorant of every department of worthy knowledge. In the Penitentiary Hospital in 1857, there were 175 of good (common) education, 754 wholly uneducated. Of 2,000 in the City, 714 could read and write their names,—scarcely more than one in 500 could do more than that;—546 could read and write imperfectly; 219 could read but not write, and 521 could neither read nor write.

It will be no small comfort to nervous parents, who in weakness and good faith do the best they can for their daughters, while they never cease to shudder at the fate that may await them, to feel that a sensible education, which at the same time inspires with self-reliance and developes the conscience, is a very great protection. Many girls no doubt adopt loose habits under the discouraging impression that in their utter ignorance they can make no head in the world—where skill and education are so essential to success that they have no chance to win in the battle of life.

Houses of ill-fame furnish withering rebukes to tippling parents—and reconcile total abstinence from strong drink to such as begin to doubt the virtue of their temperance. Of 2,000 prostitutes who were questioned, 1,252 reported that their fathers drank more or less intemperately; 921 confessed that their mothers drank; but in both cases the moderate drinkers outnumbered the immoderate. Concerning prostitutes there is one general rule—all drink. Not one per cent practise their calling without partaking of intoxicating liquors. Among the more aristocratic, absolute intoxication is held disgraceful. Yet champagne is always sold in the more pretentious houses, and in lower quarters gin is the common drink—a gin compounded not of simple alcohol, water and juniper berries, as it is honestly adulterated, but chiefly of spirits of turpentine and alcohol,—and the vile stuff furnishes as desperate an excitement, and as thorough a stupefaction, as any purer liquor. They need the fire of liquor in their veins to outburn and pale the fires of conscience. Their day is one perpetual succession of drinking, excitement, and dreams. In the expensively-furnished houses of the upper class, where the visitors are mostly profligate men of wealth, the profanity is not loud, nor is obscene language always heard. The inmate who pays $16 a week for her board, spends her day in sleep, novel-reading, and cards, and her night in the wildest fury of intoxication, finds the natural end of her brief career in a degradation to a cheaper house, where the charges for board are less, and which is principally visited by clerks, mechanics, and strangers from the hotels. Her next passage is to the third-class of houses, which empty their inmates upon the streets at dark, bedizened with finery, and dressed in the extreme of the latest fashions, to toll simpletons to their dens, where the panel game is deeply played, and where thieves largely resort. They suffer untold brutalities from the bullies who live on their earnings, and from the violence of reckless rowdies, as the police reports constantly show. Her next descent is to the dance-house, of which PETE DAWSON'S, lately made famous in the newspapers, is the type, and from which, not because of bars and bolts, but of overwhelming debt, and loss of mental energy, and of hopelessness, escape is almost impossible, except to the Penitentiary. Many of them spend more time in the Penitentiary than out of it. Fond, to the last, of liberty, they shun the commitment which gives them a decent prison home, but when released, soon find their way back again within the walls. If death is slack in fetching relief, they get at last to the Almshouse, or abruptly end their career by suicide. Two-fifths of all who were questioned confessed that they were suffering from syphilitic or other diseases of the same nature, and the actual facts are very far worse than their confession. Will any wonder, considering their constant mental and physical torture, their horrid, fiery drinks, their suffering under the most tormenting disease ever permitted to rack and ravage the frame, that they are short-lived? The average duration of the prostitute's life, after beginning her career, does not exceed four years. One-fourth then, or 1,500, die yearly in our City—and who ever has lived here four years has seen a whole generation of them disappear. Probably not one of the painted procession in Broadway to-night, four years hence, will be out of her dishonored grave.

This estimate far exceeds their mortality in Paris. M. PARENT DUCHALETEL found that of 3,517 prostitutes, 242 had led that life upward of 14 years, and 641 for more than 10 years. In Paris, 6¼ per cent survived the horrors of courtesan life 14 years; in New-York only 2½ per cent. The health of abandoned women has deteriorated in late years. Facts compel to the conclusion that commerce with prostitutes in 1857 was attended with nearly twice the risk of infection that was incurred in 1854. To this should be added the fact that during the past year, 74,000 cases of venereal disease were treated in New-York privately, either by competent physicians or by charlatans, or publicly in hospitals. Nor must the virtuous be filled with pity only—they have need of alarm. It is no common poison like that of yellow fever, killing outright its victims—or, unleaving them, leaving them to a perfect convalescence. This subtle mischief hides itself in the bones—and protrudes its ugly marks in the next generation. The innocent children of foolish parents are tainted with it to the third generation. No repentance expels this leprosy from the blood, but the father who sinned in his youth and never repented his folly may give to his sea a stain and a weakness which lessens throughout his life his vital force and impairs his physical stamina. It is not a question for the vicious alone. Those who have held that it was a special curse upon such as surrender to passion, find that by intermarriage with parties deemed untainted, the darling members of their own families are crippled and poisoned. If in the sketch of the chemist, if in the materia medica, if in the precepts of morality, the influence of edu-

The Legislature [illegible] Monday, Nov. 8, 1858.

The complete returns of our vote on the 2d, show that Gov. BANKS received 67,000, Mr. BANCROFT, Mr. LAWRENCE 12,000. Mr. BANCROFT's majority about balances that of the Governor, and though it is practically of no little consequence as one of Mr. TOOTS' calls, it is not unpatriotic to the Democracy, in the evil days they have fallen upon. To gain anything in Massachusetts, even if it be less real than apparent, is to be thought of, when the Democracy of Illinois are reduced to 3,000, and Pennsylvania and New-Jersey are lost. The entire vote is 117,000.

The Legislative elections show that the Republicans have gained four Senators, and nearly forty Representatives, compared with 1857. There were 20 Republican Senators then chosen, 4 Americans and 3 Democrats, and not one American. The House then stood 103 Republicans, 40 Democrats and 34 Americans. Now it stands 111 Republicans, 36 Democrats, 10 Americans and 1 Whig. Thus in four years, three of which it ruled the State, the American Party, with its ninety odd thousand votes, has vanished, thanks to the intolerable stupidity of its leaders, whose only faculty is that of making a great party become a small one. Even Governor GARDNER must now admit that, his party having become nothing, it is time for him to go back to his original part of nobody. Two years ago he was thought of in connection with the Vice-Presidency; now, he could not get an election to the Boston Common Council. They do say that he furnished not a little of the money that was betted against Mr. BUCKINGHAM's election. It must be some consolation to him that he is able to lose it, and that a few thousands or so can hardly be missed out of his half million.

The pluralities in the Congressional Districts foot up to more than 30,000, which is rather better than the vote for Governor, though the difference is not material, and it is probable the Governor's vote is the larger of the two. It is a notable fact that the largest plurality is that given for Mr. THAYER, in the Worcester District, No. 9; notable, I mean, because Mr. THAYER ran on the same basis, so far as Slavery Extension is concerned, as Mr. DOUGLAS. He is for the popular sovereignty swindle, which was the Democratic platform from the beginning of 1854 to the close of 1857. If, in 1854 or 1856, any one had undertaken to run in the Worcester District on the basis that any community can have the right to establish Slavery because a majority of its voters have pronounced in favor of that institution, he could not have got a vote outside of the Democratic Party; and had any Republican avowed his adhesion to "popular sovereignty," he would have been considered too mad to be left in any other place than a hospital of incurables. This change may be progress, but to my mind it seems much like progress in the direction of Avernus.

Candidates for the Speakership of the House of Representatives literally swarm. The most prominent of them are Mr. HALE and Mr. UPHAM, both old Whigs; and I believe all the other persons named are Whigs. Indeed, a Republican triumph is about the same thing as a Whig triumph. Mr. BANKS is one of the few Democrats who have anything of consequence under the ascendancy of a party that is composed in nearly equal parts of old Whigs and old Democrats. This may be natural, but it looks queer.

We have thought more of the Illinois election than of our own. The contest in that State has been a source of lively interest from its commencement to us, perhaps, more than to any other community equally remote from its scene. From the moment that Senator DOUGLAS broke with the President, some of our principal Republican leaders were for giving him the warmest welcome into their party, acting in connection with eminent men in other States. For this they were grossly abused by Illinoisans, and finally they had to depart from their original plan, and consent to let the Illinois Republicans settle what was in reality a national question, but not without warning them that they were doing the work of the Democracy, and preparing the way for a Democrat at the next Presidential contest. They hoped the event would show the Illinoisans were right in their estimate of political affairs; but it has not, and the victory that might have been won easily must now be fought for, and may not come at any price. Our Democrats are all for DOUGLAS, even in the Custom-House. The masses of the Democrats have been for him from the start, but the Illinois returns were necessary to convert the office-holders, who always go with the hangman. We have had no Douglas Democratic firing here yet, but in New-Hampshire they have banged away as if they had won a victory—as, perhaps, they have.

We have reports that Mr. SUMNER will not take his seat again in the Senate, but probably they are not reliable. His resignation now would be the means of making a Senator of Governor BANKS.

Now that the State election is over there is to be a campaign commenced for the redemption of the city from something or other. The temperance people are moving, and desire to have a party formed for the purpose of instituting a municipal government which shall enforce the law against liquor-selling as rigidly as it is enforced in some little town where there are a couple of hundred families, and where every family knows what every other family eats and drinks. The crusade promises to be a long one, for the rum interest is a great one here. The owners of grog-shops, genteel bar-rooms and hotels find liquor-sellers excellent tenants, paying heavy rents, and paying them, too, with a punctuality that virtue does not always imitate when settling its bills. Admitting that there are 2,000 such establishments in the city, and that their average rent is $300, and the total is the handsome amount of $600,000. I presume it is much more, and that among the landlords are not a few of the most zealous temperance men in the State, who would care as little to give up their rents as if they preferred rum to water. Business, too, is so interlaced, as it were, and all pecuniary interests bear so closely upon one another, that it would be a very difficult thing to strike at one of any magnitude, without such injuries to others. Cut off the rents that A, B and C derive from their buildings, and D can't sell rum, and they can't pay the bills they owe to D, E and F; and so it will go, if our reformers should get the ascendency, until a very fine addition was made to our present sufferings. However, the evil is not likely to happen for the present, as Boston can't be carried by the Temperance Party, who had better turn their attention to moral suasion again. Rum is too strong for them here, though complaints of its weakness are occasionally heard.

The Democrats think they are strong enough to obtain possession of the City Government, and perhaps they are, as Mr. BANCS had a small plurality over Governor BANKS in Boston. They would, too, have on their side, should they nominate a party ticket, hundreds upon hundreds of persons who do not desire to have a Maine law government here set up. Col. HEARD's name has been mentioned in connection with the Mayoralty, and he would make a good candidate, and an excellent Mayor; but his nomination would excite temperance people terribly, as he makes rum, and so has made a fortune. It would be regarded as a positive defiance, and there would be a pitched battle, in which rum, I think, would win, and win handsomely.

Governor UNDERWOOD's speech is exciting much attention among our politicians, and it is thought it is an overture to DOUGLAS, and the beginning of the Democracy's rehabilitation.

We are to have the Italian Opera at the Boston Theatre, at the close of the month, with the PARODI-MIRI. So it is reported. I suppose you can spare her long enough to give us an opportunity to get down on our knees before the grand dame.

You will recollect, perhaps, that I stated at the time that the Cashier of the Brighton Bank had made away with a much larger sum than was stated by the papers here, and that it would reach to $200,000. So it is now acknowledged. The Bank's loss will probably be about $40,000, which it has reserved funds sufficient to cover, and so save its capital intact. The fellow has been turned out of the Church to which he belonged. He is tossed to be even a Saint. There is nothing said about punishing him, as the the child is punished who takes a loaf of bread to save itself from starvation.

New-England is looking up in a literary sense. Mr. PARKS, who wrote the only history of Boston that is worth anything, has gone to Europe to make researches connected with a work on New-England he has on hand. The first volume of Mr. PALFREY's long-promised History of the Settlement of New-England is soon to appear. It will be complete in itself, but the entire work will extend to three firm volumes, and will come down to the revolution of 1688-9, when our ancestors overthrew the government of Sir EDMUND ANDROS, which was much such a government as that which the Greeks were used to call a tyranny. The seventy years embraced in the work constitute the Colonial age, when New-England, for the most part, was theocratically governed, not greatly, I must say, to the advantage of the theocratic spirit, which is the most detestable that can animate a government. In the first volume, there is to be a most full account of Puritanism and Puritan politics in the reigns of ELIZABETH, JAMES I. and CHARLES I., without full knowledge of which it is impossible to understand our early history, or, indeed, any part of our history. Mr. SAVAGE's Genealogical Dictionary of the first settlers of New-England, showing three generations of those who came here previous to 1692, is in press. The author has been engaged on it for twelve years.

Mr. CHOATE has given 12 volumes of law-books to the City Library. The collection contains all the Massachusetts Reports for 56 years, and the revised statutes and all their supplements.

Our lecture list for this season are very rich, and particularly so in contrasts. It would be odd enough to see Colonel FENTON's name figuring in any list of lecturers for a Boston course, but it is more than odd enough to find it in the same list with that of Wendell PHILLIPS. They are both engaged by the Mercantile Library. George D. Prentice, J. P. Bean, Jr., and Henry Ward Beecher are on the same list. Number of gentlemen have given to the Mercantile Library Association a fine cast from the original of the statue known as the Venus de Milo. Mr. RICHARDSON, of Congress elect from No. 4, is among the donors.

The complete returns of our vote on the 2d, show that Gov. BANKS received 67,000, Mr. BANCROFT 55,000, Mr. LAWRENCE 12,000. Mr. BILL reviews the trade in Breadstuffs during the last fortnight, thus:

The receipts of Flour for the fortnight have been on the increase, and, being in excess of the usual home trade, which comprises the chief portion of the present demand, the receivers have been ready sellers at a decline of about 20c. @25c. ⅌ bbl. on the lower grades of State; the better descriptions have declined less, but the business closes rather heavily at somewhat irregular prices; the stock in store is larger than usual, but the easy state of the money market enables it, so far, to be held with ease. The receipts by Erie Canal at tide-water on the Hudson River, from the opening in May to the 1st of November, show an increase of 250,149 bbls. Flour, 2,848,672 bush. Wheat, 799,162 bush. Indian Corn, and 1,366,288 bush. Barley in 1855 over the receipts of the same period in 1857. For export to England, there is no inquiry, but occasional orders are filled to a limited amount for the Mediterranean ports. The home demand is steady, and improves as the season advances, still dealers are unwilling to hold large stocks, and purchase for immediate wants only. In Wheat, the transactions are moderate; the comparative absence of prime samples, and the high rates demanded, serve to check business; occasionally an export order is executed, but this is no ruling feature of the market, the city and local millers being the principal buyers. Prime Western Red Winter, and the better grades of White are held firmly, while the inferior descriptions are dull of sale at irregular prices, (according to quality and condition. Indian Corn is less freely offered, and holders have been enabled to realize an advance of 5c. @8c. ⅌ bushel on Western mixed. Other kinds are scarce, and remain without much change in price.

HAY—Sales 1,800 bales at 45c. @55c., chiefly at 50c. @55c. cash, ⅌ 100 lbs.

HIDES—Sales have been reported of 15,000 Dry California at 22c., 6 mos.; also, 2,000 Wet Salted California, 1,600 Rio Grande Cow, and 1,700 Buenos Ayres Kips at private bargain.

HOPS—Continue in moderate demand, at unchanged rates. New, 19c. @16c.; Old, 4c. @7c. ⅌ ℔.

MOLASSES—The demand has been more animated, and sales have been made of 140 hhds. Porto Rico at 23c., 415 hhds. Cuba at 21½c. @25c.; 60 hhds. do., in bond, at 16c.; also, by auction, 20 hhds. Porto Rico at 27c. @30c.; 50 hhds. Cuba Muscovado at 23c. @22c.; with 22 bbls. and 40 half bbls. Texas at 22c. @21½c., cash, ⅌ gallon.

NAVAL STORES—Tar and Turpentine remain as last noticed. Large sales of Rosin were reported, but without particulars. Messrs. Rigney & Son review the business of the past week, thus: "Spirits Turpentine has been in improved request, at slightly enhanced rates, closing, however, quietly at 34c., cash. Crude is in light supply, and is quiet at $4 ⅌ 280 lbs. Common Rosin continues languid, and prices are somewhat nominal at $1 87½@$1 40 ⅌ 2,240 lbs., afloat and delivered. Medium fine grades have been in fair request at $2 50@$2 75 ⅌ 280 lbs. Tar has been quite active, with sales of 2,700@4,000 bbls., to arrive and on the spot, at $2 12½@$2 75, as to quality."

OILS—Advice from the East report sales of 600 bbls. Crude Whale at 38c.; and 500 bbls. do. Sperm at $1 24 ⅌ gallon. Linseed is dull and heavy, at 62c. @63c. ⅌ gallon. Lard Oil is selling, in lots, at 90c. @95c. ⅌ gallon. Tallow Oil, 9½c.; Palm Oil, 9½c. ⅌ ℔.

PROVISIONS—Pork is in request, and is firmer. Sales 1,600 bbls., in lots, at $17 25@$17 37½ for Mess; and $13 75 for Prime. ⅌ bbl. Cut Meats are inactive and nominal. Bacon is dull and heavy, chiefly at 9c. @10c. ⅌ ℔. Rough Sides, 7½c. @7¾c.; Smoked Hams, 10c. @11½c. ⅌ ℔. Lard is in moderate demand, at former rates; sales 305 tcs. and bbls., at 10½c. @11c. for old; and 10½c. @10¾c. for new, ⅌ ℔. Beef is in fair request at uniform prices; sales have been reported of 200 bbls., in lots, at $10@$12 for repacked Western Mess; $12@$13 for extra do.; $8 50@$9 50 for Country Mess; $5 50@$7 25 for do. Prime. ⅌ bbl. Prime Mess Beef, $18@$19 ⅌ bbl. Beef Hams, $14@$15 50 ⅌ bbl. Butter is in request, at 12c. @17c. for Ohio; 16c. @21c. for common to good State, and 22c. @30c. for prime to choice State, ⅌ ℔. Cheese is worth 7c. @8¼c. ⅌ ℔.

RICE—Sales reported of 150 tcs., at $3@$3 75 ⅌ 100 ℔.

SALT—Sales have been reported of 5,650 sacks Liverpool fine on private terms.

SPICES—Sales 2,000 mats Cassia at 22c. ⅌ ℔.

SUGARS—Have been in fair request at buoyant prices. Sales to-day, 438 hhds. Porto Rico at 6¾c. @8¼c.; 140 hhds. Cuba, at 6¼c. @7¼c.; 150 hhds. do., in bond, at 5¾c. @7c.; and 80 hhds. Carthagena, at 8¼c. ⅌ ℔.

TALLOW—Sales 13,000 ℔s. prime at 10c. ⅌ ℔.

TOBACCO—Is in fair demand at full rates; sales since Friday last 31 hhds. Kentucky at 11c. @12½c.; 120 cases Seed Leaf at 11c. @13c.; 162 bales Havana at 30c. @40c.; 206 bales Cuba at 17c. @18c.; and 735 bales Yara on terms not disclosed. Buyers and sellers of Tobacco at Louisville, Ky., have had some difference on the subject of the appointment by the Governor and City Council of inspectors at that place. Sellers contend for inspectors as incumbents. The Journal of Nov. 3 urges moderation and concession on both sides. It states that the Tobacco crop for the last season, sold at that place, amounted to the enormous sum of over two million of dollars, and insists that that is too large an interest to be lightly jeoparded by the rashness and stubbornness of inspectors or sellers.

WHISKY—Sales have been confined to small lots, at 22½c. ⅌ gallon.

FREIGHTS—For Liverpool, there were taken 400 bales Cotton, at 5-16d. @7-32d. ⅌ ℔.; 750 bbls. Rosin, at 2s.; and 500 boxes Cheese, at 22s. 6d. For London, 250 bbls. Rosin, at 2s.

General Mitchell has presented the Emperor Napoleon with the first copy of the journal of the works executed by the French engineers during the siege of Sebastopol. The work, which required the labor of three years for its execution, has just been finished. There is a magnificent vase attached to it, which gives all the English, French and Russian attacks.

Parson Brownlow fails to receive the gratitude of the South for his labors in behalf of Slavery. The ultra Southern papers remarks his recent debate with Mr. Pryne in Philadelphia. The Columbia (S. C.) Guardian gives the Parson credit for good intentions, but doubts "if his arguments made a single convert in Philadelphia or elsewhere."

An English paper says: "Somewhat more than two hundred years ago, namely, June 27, 1634, Wm. Wiseman, Esq., an immediate ancestor of Cardinal Wiseman, was elected M. P. for Bandon-bridge, perhaps the most strongly Protestant constituency in the south of Ireland."

Mr. G. P. R. James, appointed British Consul-General at Venice, is now in Paris, on his way to that port. Mr. Gould has lately been the only British diplomatic agent at Venice, and is reported to have given great satisfaction to the Foreign Office.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Thomas Ratcliffe was tried a few days ago, at Toronto, upon the charge of having stolen real and personal property belonging to Miss Hannah Bloxam, a colored woman, with whom he absconded to the United States with the intention, it is conjectured, of selling her into slavery. He brought her as far as Detroit, and then tried to persuade her to go on to St. Louis, but she refused, when he left her, taking all her property with him. Hearing after awards that Ratcliffe was in Montreal, she came there and found the property in his possession, and had him apprehended. The jury found him guilty, and in passing sentence, the Chief Justice characterized the crime as one of the most despicable nature which he had ever known.

An interesting trial has taken place at Yellow Springs, Ohio. Suit was brought by a student at Antioch College against two parties for forcibly entering and disposessing him of the room he occupied in one of the dormitories belonging to the College. He had been expelled from the College, and it was held that he was not entitled to his room after that event, but the Jury found a verdict in his favor, on the ground that the expulsion had nothing to do with this case of eviction. The law of landlord and the tenant does not, therefore, apply to Colleges. The Hon. Thomas Corwin was counsel for defence. The case will be appealed.

Mobile papers lament that the Alabama University shows signs of decay. The Mercury says: "From Alabama we send annually some 200 students to colleges in other States, while to our own University we can, at the opening of the scholastic year of 1855, furnish but the pitiful number of nine Freshmen."

NEWS OF THE DAY.

The screw-steamship Kangaroo, from Liverpool on the 3d inst., arrived yesterday. Her intelligence is substantially four days later than that by the Circassian, as the latter left on the 26th, and as we have had but a meagre telegraphic outline of her news. The settlement of the Franco-Portuguese question is verified, the Charter of Georges having been delivered up, the Captain released, and a large indemnity stipulated. The remonstrances of the British Foreign Office in the affair had excited some indignation in Paris. There seems to be a suspicion that the blow was not entirely directed at England. The [illegible] of the Waleski within the Golden Horn had so [illegible] Russian diplomatists at Constantinople, [illegible] in addressing a protest to the Porte. The Porte had accordingly requested the officer [illegible] to retire, which, at the latest [illegible] was about to do. The "blessed baby" [illegible] continues to occupy the English and French papers. No final answer to the French [illegible] has yet been had from his Holiness. [illegible], "the electrician and projector," assures the Atlantic Telegraph Company that he will [illegible] the cable in good working order in a few days, if intrusted with the entire control. From India and China we have later advices of no consequence moment. Lord Elgin had reached Shanghai, after concluding a favorable treaty with the Emperor of Japan.

From Yucatan we have word that the country is slowly recruiting, enjoying a rapid revival of its [illegible]. The coming of General Paez is anticipated with the utmost eagerness. The official paper at the capital pays a handsome tribute to Mr. CHARLES [illegible], the departing American Minister, who is superseded by Col. TURNER, the new appointee.

The alliance between General WALKER and J. L. WILSON, Esq., excites the greatest astonishment among the particular friends of the latter, who have [illegible] the hold of shooting WALKER without stint. It is now [illegible] that the passengers on board the steamship Washington, which recently sailed from this port with the ostensible purpose of going to Greytown, via the Nicaragua Transit route, are filibusters, and that WILSON himself says that as the United States Marshal he would not protect him and his [illegible], he has come in the resolution to protect himself. It is stated that he had the offer from Gen. [illegible] of the command intended for Mr. VENABLE, but that he declined on hearing the one which he at [illegible] accepted. It is difficult to [illegible] what the present complication will lead to. [illegible] arrived in Washington yesterday, [illegible], in response to a dispatch from WHITE, [illegible] interview took place between him and WALKER [illegible] the intention being to talk over and settle [illegible]. Judge YRIARTE is also now implicated as one of the filibusters, and is, it is alleged, to furnish passports to all "emigrants" who call on WHITE's [illegible].

According to dispatches from Col. MILES, commanding against the Navajo Indians, they are likely to give a great deal of trouble before they are conquered. They are numerous, powerful and wealthy, and once [illegible] under a single leader, will make a resistance to the troops which will be quite formidable. Since Col. MILES' battle with them at Cañon de Chelly, another affair has occurred between a detachment of troops under Capt. ROBERTS and a band of the Navajoes, [illegible] principal chief, and six others [illegible]. They are now driving [illegible] take the mountains as a [illegible] to making a decided stand.

It is stated that the Hon. BENJAMIN CORNING has been [illegible] by the President, to succeed [illegible] of a Board to consult him relative to the iron [illegible] in view of the proposed revision of the Tariff at the coming session of Congress, and also to obtain his opinions as to the best plan for the construction of a Railroad to the Pacific. The Administration, it is believed, is determined to push both these matters at an early stage of the session.

Notice has been given to the Hon. THOMAS J. FOGARTY, elected to Congress from the First District of Pennsylvania, that his right to a seat will be contested. The opponent, Mr. BYRNE, the People's candidate, claims to be elected by 400 majority.

In Congress, the Ninth Congressional District of Pennsylvania has not yet been decided—the official canvass of returns having been concluded. Mr. [illegible] is confident of his election.

The Committee of Ways and Means, in their consideration of financial schedule connected with the Tariff, have [illegible] the bogus bills on the "Bank of Fairmount, Maine," have excited [illegible] attention. A large number of [illegible] are said to be implicated in the [illegible], it is stated, fearing the [illegible] have fled from the City. The plates for the bills were engraved by Messrs. [illegible], the celebrated [illegible] of Boston, and, without any suspicion on their part of [illegible] in the transaction. The [illegible] is a [illegible].

Yesterday, about 1,100 bales of Cotton were sold at heavy prices. Flour was more active, and somewhat firmer. Wheat and Corn were in fair request, the latter at advanced prices. Pork was dearer and moderately active. Sugar, Coffee and Molasses were pretty fully sold up. Rice was firmer. Hides and Whale Oil were quiet and heavy.

THE BANK-NOTE ENGRAVERS.—Some few months ago, a combination of all the bank-note engravers in the country was effected, ostensibly for the protection of the community against the fraudulent issue of spurious money. This combination has, no doubt, effected a great deal of good for its members—since it has secured the monopoly of all work at fixed rates. But, beyond the benefit thus self-conferred, the combination of bank-note engravers has not been productive of much other good. It has [illegible] by deluding persons into an [illegible] degree of confidence, which would not appear to have been wisely placed. The public was yesterday informed, under the head of Police Reports, that half a million of bogus notes, purporting to be issued by a Maine Bank, which has no existence, had been thrown upon the market. The bills are said to be engraved in the first style of art, and the work is reported to have been done by a Yankee, [illegible] of the combination, who took, of course, the precaution to have the plates and dies made out of the United States. Thus, the people throughout the United States have been subjected to the payment of very high rates for their bank bills, on the plea of insuring their safety against forgery, while the protection afforded them has been of very doubtful character, which is disclosed by the discovery of the notes of the "Bank of Fairmount, in Maine." A celebrated orator speaks very pathetically of "the protection which vultures give to lambs." What shall he said of the costly protection which bank-note engravers claim to give to the public?

The Political Horizon.

There is always a lull after a tempest:—and so the political world has subsided into an unwonted calm since the elections. All parties are trying to devise what consolation the result may be made to yield. The Republicans are naturally and excusably exultant over their sweeping victories, to which the only drawback comes from the brilliant triumph of DOUGLAS in Illinois, with the unpleasant suspicion which it seems to authorize, that he has stolen just enough of their thunder to spoil their chances for 1860. They are, accordingly, scrutinizing the case with special care. One Republican journal comforts itself by thinking of the herculean efforts made by DOUGLAS, and the enormous sums of money he must have spent, very justly supposing that these exertions cannot be renewed ad infinitum. Another is endeavoring to convince itself that his triumph is not very complete after all, and that if the districts of Illinois were only differently constituted he could not be returned to the Senate in spite of his apparent success. And a third predicts that his misdeeds in the past have been so manifold and so [illegible], that he will find it impossible to command the confidence of the North to any dangerous extent.

The Administration organs find it still more difficult to derive consolation or hope from any aspect of the political heavens. They are sour and out of temper, and find their chief solace in denouncing the doctrines put forth by Mr. SEWARD in his Rochester speech as involving the height of treason to the country and danger to the Union. They ring the charges upon it as if it were some new revelation of the distinguished Senator's opinion,—as if he had just now for the first time proclaimed his hostilities to Slavery and his hope of its extinction. This is somewhat absurd. Everyone who knows anything of his political history understands perfectly that there was nothing new in the speech, except possibly a stronger imputation of his own views to the Republican Party than that party has ever hitherto been willing to allow. A correspondent of the Tribune yesterday shows very clearly, by a collation of Mr. SEWARD's speeches, that he has always held and expressed the very sentiments which now excite so much alarm. This, however, does not amount to a vindication of anything but Mr. SEWARD's personal consistency, and it cannot escape observation that a good many Republicans, in various sections of the country, shrink from the task of maintaining these views and vindicating these opinions of our Senator in a Presidential canvass.

The Washington Union evidently considers its own peculiar party in extremis. We have heard a rumor—from what ought certainly to be good authority—that the Union has been sold to the friends of DOUGLAS, and that they will enter upon its active management soon after the opening of the session of Congress. If so, its temporary editors are evidently inclined to improve the brief remnant of power that still remains to them. They are unusually vehement in their abuse of DOUGLAS, imperative in excluding him from any position of influence in the Democratic Party, and zealous in their endeavors to rally the old Southern State-Rights Party to their support. They join this wing of the Democracy in rejecting the doctrine of popular sovereignty in the Territories, upon which DOUGLAS has taken his stand, and invoke the Southern ultraists to assume their wonted control over the policy and action of the party. Unfortunately for them, however, the Southern ultraists seem to understand the emergency of the case, and have no disposition to be thus crushed between the sectional millstones which threaten their destruction. Senator HAMMOND's speech has created a marked sensation throughout the country, and is regarded as the symptom of a general abandonment, by the Southern Democracy, of the extreme position which they find they can no longer hold. The sentiments of that speech, so far as they relate to practical political issues, meet a very general concurrence from the people of the Free States.

Indeed the general impression seems to be that Senator DOUGLAS and Senator HAMMOND have devised a platform upon which the National Democratic Party can be reconstructed, and by which it can regain the prestige and moral power which it lost by the disastrous victory of 1856. The Republicans, who have all along considered their success in 1860 as nearly certain, are puzzled and a little dismayed by the new prospect—while the Democrats are one and all listening anxiously for the recruiting drum which is to give the signal for enlistment under their new commander.

Our Judiciary—Conflict of the Judges and Uncertainty of the Law.

In and about the time of the elections, it is somewhat difficult to get a hearing for any observations which do not calculate somebody's chances of something; and after having elected a Governor, put DOUGLAS on the high road to the Presidency, "framed a platform," or "indorsed a standard-bearer," every one feels that to condescend to take precautions against having his throat cut or his pocket picked, would be attended with a certain loss of dignity. Two-thirds, for instance, of those in New-York who think the comparative chances of SEWARD and DOUGLAS of being elected in 1860, a subject of surpassing interest, would hardly turn on their heel to put an honest man or a good lawyer on the bench of one of the Courts of this City. And yet, astounding as the assertion may seem, it is of more importance to public morals and public happiness in this State, who it is that shall sit in our judgment-seats for the next six years, than who shall occupy the White House for the next term. Everything in the country is of secondary importance to the Judiciary. Congress sits, and Presidents are elected, and armies march and fleets sail, simply that Judges may be enabled to decide rightfully, without fear or favor. The whole machinery of Governments, however ponderous it may be, exists, or ought to exist, in every State, as SIDNEY SMITH wittily said, for the simple purpose of getting twelve honest men into the jury-box. Civil society is formed simply that we may not have to collect our debts by inflicting corporeal punishment on our debtors, or to carry a musket on our shoulders all day, in [illegible] are not [illegible] is a farce, and the [illegible] a laughing [illegible]. If A cannot be made to pay no what he owes us, and if B may beat us with impunity whenever he sees us in the street, we do not care a straw who gets the Charleston nomination, or what side the Anti-Lecompton Democrats take at next election. Any interest we take in the matter, or any one takes in it, is due to each man's anxiety to have his liberty unshackled, and his property secure. Even the sentiment of patriotism, powerful as it is, and much as it may be roused to perform, is based on this lower, grosser, but most natural feeling. Where there is no security, there is no love of country. When we say we love our country, we mean we love that state of things in which we eat and drink, and labor, and trade, and travel, and speak in peace. If we were satisfied that MULLIGAN might pummel us whenever he pleased, or that DEVLIN could always filch our earnings from us, we should become citizens of the world, and be as content, barring the heat and the flies, in having our lot pitched in Oude, as in New-York.

Now, nothing tends so much to security as certainty in the law—or, in other words, the existence of rules by which, as long as the Legislature does not change them, every man may base his calculations, or regulate his conduct. In the fact that no man knows what the law is, lie two-thirds of the evil of despotism. The whim of the sovereign supplies the place of acts of the Legislature and decisions of the Courts; and a well-intentioned person may have his head cut off in the evening simply for doing what was enjoined upon him in the morning. If once a decree was promulgated, it was sure to stand and be rigidly enforced, living under an absolute monarchy would not be so very irksome after all; but a subject of the Sultan or of the Czar may find himself any day in durance vile, because he is unable to ascertain after breakfast what opinion his master entertains of every act which a member of a civilized society can by any possibility perform.

We think ourselves happier than either Turk or Russian, because we do not happen to have an absolute Prince reigning at Albany; but in point of fact we have hardly a Judge on the Bench who does not inflict on us the sorest curse of tyranny, in infusing uncertainty into the law, throwing doubt over all rights, and over all the remedies for our wrongs. We have in the State of New-York about fifty Judges, and certainly every four Judges, or those of each District, without counting the Recorder, City Judge or those of the Superior Court, are in the habit every term of their Court of pronouncing decisions which are either not law at all, or are different from the law in other Districts. In this City even, there is one law in the Superior Court, another in the Supreme Court, and another in the Common Pleas, besides Judge RUSSELL's law, which in many respects is more remarkable than any. We do not mean to institute any invidious comparison, but we state a fact. There is such a variance in the decisions in each District and in each Court that it amounts to an almost absolute substitution of the discretion of the Judge for both the common law and the statute. The consequence is that every case of any importance has to be carried to the Court of Appeals in order to get a final and satisfactory decision. But as all cases go to the Court of Appeals, the Supreme Court and all the others, ponderous machines though they be, are thus degraded into the humble position of referees for the taking of evidence. If the suitor is rich enough and courageous enough to appeal, he has to wait two years, and justice is thus delayed; if he cannot appeal, he feels that justice is denied him.

The common law has always, both here and in its birth-place, been considered a vague and uncertain thing. It was necessarily so in the beginning, for the simple reason that it was but oral tradition. It was reduced to a system, and principles framed out of it, by a series of able judges administering it for some hundreds of years. By strict adherence to precedent—one of the objections to it, its uncertainty, lost a great part of its force. To have to look for it in hundreds of volumes of reports is, no doubt, a great evil; but to have it lodged in the heads of some score of judges, each judging on his own responsibility, and without any respect for his predecessors, and without paying any attention to his colleagues, is a worse evil still. In England, though there are four courts, all of which weigh heavily on mankind, there is sufficient uniformity in the decisions, and consequently sufficient clearness in the law, to make most people satisfied with one trial. The cases which are carried to the House of Lords are few in number. The reasons are obvious. All the judges of the English Court are men who, when they were at the bar, were in the front ranks of the profession. They were appointed because they had the largest practice and did it the best. A judgeship is the ordinary reward to which a successful lawyer looks forward. He works hard in his early years, not that he may at last own a corner house and lot alone, but that he may have a seat on the Bench. Those who know anything of the bar here, know what sort of value a first-rate lawyer places on a Judgeship. If CHARLES O'CONOR, DANIEL LORD or DUDLEY FIELD were at the English bar, they would be sitting in ermine at Westminster and very proud of it. Here they would scorn such promotion. The result is, that the law is administered by men who have hardly got hold of its principles, who have had but few clients, and, consequently, little experience, and whose minds have not received a legal training. They administer justice after their fashion, but their fashion is deplorably bad. The Supreme Court of this District has, three times within the last year, attempted to convict a murderer in a very plain case, and every time blundered grossly, and failed miserably. Almost every serious offence is tried twice, at least, owing to the erroneous ruling of the Judges on minor points of law. It may be safely said that there is hardly a man on the bench who can conduct a long trial, either civil or criminal, with even fair accuracy. Look at CAMERON's case; look at RODGERS' case; look at the Willis examination two days ago; look at the Harlem Railroad case; look at the Lowber case; look at all the scandals of the last twelve months—the hopeless mixture of ignorance and stupidity and chicane which they display.

Some people lay the blame of all this on the law itself, and fancy we should be all right if we only had a good code, like that of France. There never was a greater mistake. There could be no code framed in which no passage would admit of different modes of interpretation. Able lawyers, interpreting in the light of great principles, would, no doubt, make their commentaries as luminous and consistent as the text; but four small pettifoggers, elected to the bench by political wirepullers, sitting in each of eight districts, with two extra courts in the capital, would, [illegible] aided by Judge [illegible] that humanity cannot endure [illegible] the decisions of the Judges [illegible] the bench.

What we want is certainty. Certainty can not be had while there are ten Courts of co-ordinate jurisdiction, composed of lawyers who did not succeed very well at the bar. We do not care even so much for good laws in clear language—laws we can understand and rely on. The present system is a close approach to wager of battle, or ordeal. As a general rule, litigants might almost as well toss up as plead.

The English on the Amazon.

Quite down among those huge primeval woods and that wild tropical undergrowth which fringe the Amazon, it would be possible for a nation to hide itself and defy research. The experiment, according to a correspondent, whose letter from Lima we published yesterday, has been tried; and in this single instance has only failed of success for reasons which gave the enterprise an unusual notoriety. The English, it seems, have acquired a vast region lying at the upper waters of the Amazon, along under the warmer side of the Andes, which they are preparing to occupy with all the means and men incidental to an extended scheme of colonization; and to the exclusion and extinction, our correspondent judges, of the several nationalities in the neighborhood. The story is a startling one, grating harshly upon American ears, attuned as they are traditionally to the doctrine of President MONROE; and certainly merits attention at the hands of Government.

The course of events which have led to this result may be briefly stated. At the disruption of the old Republic of Colombia, and the erection of three States from the ruins, there was an unexplored tract of unknown limits lying upon the upper tributaries of the Amazon, which was to be the subject of future survey, each State in the meantime holding an undivided interest, proportioned to the share of the public debt of the integral Republic which it was obliged to assume. As Ecuador became liable for one-fifth of the debt, she acquired an undivided fifth of the lands, and has held them until recently. The English, who are the creditors of all mankind, held at the same time the Colombia bonds, urging from time to time upon the impoverished treasury of Ecuador their payment, principal and interest. But as the treasury never, by any good fortune, possessed a surplus applicable to vexatious old debts, of forgotten consideration, and as the importunities of the English creditors grew yearly fiercer and more formidable, it occurred to the Government that this outstanding interest in wild lands might be turned to account. It was tendered to the creditors in lieu of all indebtedness. On mature consideration, and due consultation with the Foreign-office in Downing-street, Lombard-street accepted the tender, with the addition of right of free access to the Amazon, ratifying the treaty at Quito in September of 1857. Forthwith they applied themselves to the construction of a small fleet of river steamers, suitable to the far inland waters that had fallen to them; and these vessels, to be laden with colonists, and to be busied in the incestimable traffic of the Amazon, are nearly ready for dispatch.

The business has not, however, reached this advanced stage without resistance. The Governments adjoining Ecuador have protested stoutly, even to the edge of war, against this disposition of territory in which the Ecuadorian interest was an unreduced fraction, not located, and at present unsusceptible of definition by boundaries. Peru has been especially vigorous in its remonstrances, both on this score and the old quarrel of FLORES; and New-Granada has sustained Peru. In the meantime, our informant represents Mr. WHITE, the American resident at Quito, as either wholly silent, or, if at all active, only active to promote the English operation, lending himself to the purposes of the British Chargé, Mr. COX, in utter forgetfulness of the interests of the United States. Of this accusation we leave the culprit to acquit himself as he may, and as doubtless he will. To the fact, however, that an English Company—and English companies are ever the pioneers of English political power—has seated itself at the heart of South America, at a point available for the future control of the politics, the trade and the civilization of that continent—at a point, moreover, directly in the path of American progress, should that path ever lead beyond the Isthmus—we would invite more earnest attention. Against the establishment of European colonies in this hemisphere we are prescriptively committed. With emigration under the auspices of the different American Governments, where the colonists accept the sovereignty of those Governments, we have nothing to do—certainly nothing in the way of discouragement. But to the establishment of a colony under English sovereignty, and protected by the English flag, or by the flag of any European state, the rescript of MONROE applies in direct terms. It was this specific evil that dogma was intended to reach; it was elicited by the situation of the very region into which this Lombard-street Colony is to settle. If the doctrine is not a dead letter, the sooner Mr. BUCHALEW, the new resident at Quito, is instructed to file his protest against the execution of the contract, the more creditable it will be to the tardy activity of the Administration, who have allowed so important a matter to proceed so far unchecked. There could be no confession more preposterous than that we have no remonstrance to utter to save the navigation of the Amazon, while we have a navy to spare to save that of the Parana.

It is a pleasant commentary upon the English grumbling at Mr. REED, to turn thus now and again to English intrigues upon our own half of the globe. At no outlook do we fail to recognize the shrewd, selfish and always vigilant energy of British acquisitiveness; hastening to points apparently designated for their American relatives by inevitable fate, and either striving for possession, or such foothold as may oblige us to pay well for our bargain when we come to make it. Thus when we talked of Texas, the English were already on hand, tempting the new State to maintain its independence in the English interest. We approach Cuba, and are defeated by the pressure, at Madrid, of English holders of Spanish bonds. The early acquisition of Mexico becomes imminent, and we find English creditors with their claims fastened upon the resources of that Republic, and demanding to be assumed with it. Our commerce with Venezuela is invaluable; it is suspended while English men-of-war blockade Laguayra. We glory in the opening of the Parana to the trade of the world, and find English sympathies and English merchants intriguing to close it. And at the moment the attention of the American people is turned to the Amazon River, directed thither by the praises of MAURY and the surveys of HERNDON and GIBBON, we learn that the inevitable money-lender of Lombard-street [illegible] mighty main. It is high time to talk [illegible] American enterprise, and encourage [illegible] of American capacity. A grain of [illegible] however, to the nature and drift of the [illegible] doctrine, and its applicability to [illegible] America, may be of service to the Department of State.

The Tariff—Taxes on Tea and Coffee.

There is a rather curious difference between the [illegible] of the system and its actual expenses [illegible] has created much admiration among the people, and has claimed [illegible] [illegible] of the observations which have appeared on this subject have, naturally enough, had special reference to the tariff as the chief source of our revenue. This is, indeed, the most important topic which will have to occupy the minds of the Cabinet and of Congress at the approaching session, and we trust that it will be discussed with the care and calmness which its consequence demands.

There would appear to be no doubt that such a change must be made in the tariff as will produce a larger amount to the Treasury than is now coming in. But the great trouble will be so to regulate the increased taxation (if an augmentation of duties is resorted to) as to avoid the destruction of interests which it might be important, in a national point of view, to maintain—to prevent any undue injury to the general trade and business of the country—and yet, at the same time, to secure the great object of the meditated change—namely, the provision of sufficient means for the exigencies of the public service.

There are collateral issues which naturally present themselves when this subject is discussed, and which will also deserve the attention of the National Legislature. When there is a very large deficit in the means of meeting the expenses of the Government, it is not sufficient to resort to expedients for increasing those means. It should also be an object to diminish the expenses, wherever economy can be practiced without rendering the public service inefficient. The people will expect, therefore, that the one branch of the question will not be disregarded while only the other is considered. Even in the regulation of the Tariff, it is not doubted that such changes can be made in the system of Import duties, as will materially diminish the present cost of collecting them.

Among the suggestions which have been put out in various quarters, we yesterday noticed one which is said to have emanated from the Secretary of the Treasury, for the imposition of a duty on tea and coffee, and the Tribune, which supplies us with the intelligence of Mr. COX's ideas on this subject, remarks that "If duties on tea and coffee are included in a general schedule which does justice to our home industry, we shall not be inclined to oppose them."

For our part, we must hope that a general schedule can be concocted, which, without doing injustice to our home industry, will not include any taxation on articles which are of prime necessity for food. It is not with any desire to resort to an ad captandum argument that we make this remark. But both tea and coffee have become articles of primary necessity with the great majority of our people, and we think that such imports should not be subjected to any duty whatever so long as the exigencies of the country can dispense with such aid. On sugar, which is equally an article of necessity, a tax would be necessary under a protective system, because sugar is largely produced at home. But the free admission of tea and coffee offers no injury whatever to home industry, and is, moreover, a great benefit to the poor, whom it has always been the policy of this country to tax as little as possible. Let the duties on all articles of luxury be placed as high as, under a tariff system, may be found necessary. Let all goods consumed exclusively by those who can afford to pay for luxuries, contribute to the expenses of the Government in proportion to the wealth of the classes who use them. But let us be very chary indeed about introducing among us, in a time of profound peace, a system of burdening the food of the poor—tea and coffee forming part of that food almost as much as bread.

We believe, too, that although it be judged wise to adhere to a protective system of taxation, all raw materials which can only be used in a manufactured state, and which would employ the mechanical skill of our artisans, should be admitted free of duty, such as, to speak generally, dyes of all descriptions, acids, and other articles used in dyeing and tanning; hemp, and the majority of all the imports coming under the head of schedule H. On the other hand, many wares which are exclusively used or consumed by the wealthy class, either in the way of ornaments or other luxury, should be made, as a general rule, to bear more of the burden of taxation than they do at present.

Whatever course may ultimately be adopted, however, in regard to our fiscal policy, we must hope that the ad valorem system will be discarded, and that an entire reform in the management of our Custom-houses will engage serious attention. Since the appearance, a few days ago, of an article in this paper, animadverting on the unwieldy machinery by which the revenue is collected, we have been informed of numerous additional examples in support of those remarks. The tendency of the cases so brought to our notice is not only to confirm the opinion which we have already expressed, regarding the obnoxious character of our present system, but to show that, in consequence of the complicated nature of the system, even those whose duty it is to administer the fiscal regulations of the country can seldom be found to agree on their precise meaning. The following is one of the cases to which we refer as an example of the evils of the existing intricate and absurd system:

Some time in May, 1857, a consignment of rum arrived in this port from Jamaica, invoiced at two shillings per gallon. On presentation of the invoice at the Custom-house, for the entry of the rum in bond, the Appraisers declared that the invoice should have been made at three shillings instead of two, and, on the ground that fraud on the Government was intended by the shippers, the rum was declared confiscated. Proof of various kinds was adduced that the value of that description of rum in Jamaica at the date of shipment was two shillings per gallon, and a certificate to the same effect from the United States Consul in that island, was produced. All testimony was, however, unheeded, and the confiscation was persisted in. The matter went into the United States District Court, where, on reviewing the facts, it was decided that no fraud had been attempted, and an order was made for the release of the rum on payment of the duties on three shillings per gallon, and of the fine of twenty per cent which the law imposes on goods whose value is raised by the Ap-

Loss of the Austria—The American Ship Poppewell.

We publish with sincere pleasure the following extract from a letter, dated Rochester, Oct. 22, just received from Captain DIXEY, of the ship Poppewell, by his brother in this City. It will be remembered that a few days ago, on the receipt of a statement written by the Captain of the Maurice to his owners, relating to the saving saved some of the passengers of the Austria, we took occasion to make some remarks on the apparent neglect by the Captain of the Poppewell (which vessel was in view of the disaster) to assist in the noble work in which Captain BERARD was engaged. We then expressed the hope that for the credit of our flag, if for no other reason, the master of the Poppewell could show that his vessel was either in a sinking condition, or was laboring under some other misfortune sufficient to prevent his aiding to save the unfortunate passengers of the Austria. The annexed extract shows that such was indeed the case, and we hasten to give it publicity, in justice to Captain DIXEY.

ROCHESTER, [illegible]

I arrived here in 46 days from New-York. I should have made the passage in 35 days, had the ship light, but she being [illegible] in ballast, [illegible] nearly the whole passage. The masters here think I deserve great credit for having brought her safe [illegible], and without [illegible] assistance, as we [illegible] in to the Western Islands. I fell in with [illegible] only a few hours after so many had perished. It was burning very rapidly [illegible] Light on the water. Smoke and [illegible] God grant that I may never see such another [illegible] and be prevented from rendering assistance.

E. C. DIXEY.

We felt satisfied that nothing short of personal and insurmountable danger to his ship and the lives of his crew would have prevented an American Captain to neglect a duty which our seamen are always glad to perform—and we have no doubt that all newspapers which have published the paragraph reflecting on the Captain of the Poppewell will also insert the extract above given.

It gives us much pleasure to be assured that Captain DIXEY has before now shown his willingness to save the lives of shipwrecked persons. The gentleman who has received the letter from which we have been permitted to quote the Poppewell's vindication, informs us that in 1855, Captain DIXEY, then in command of another vessel, succeeded, at the risk of his own life, and under the most trying circumstances, in saving the crew of a vessel stranded off the mouth of the Columbia River, and that on two or three other occasions he has performed similar service under the most unfavorable circumstances.

The Poppewell was from New-Orleans, bound to Bordeaux, but she was in a wretched condition from the very outset of her voyage, and put into this port with eight feet of water in her hold, and with every man on board as well as her Captain, sick of the yellow fever. The Quarantine regulations are so rigidly enforced that she was not allowed to come to the City but required that her Captain, mate and crew, sick and all, promptly refused to go in such a condition. Captain DIXEY was engaged to finish the voyage under these adverse circumstances, and put to sea in her after the water had been removed and her pumps repaired. But she had no sooner got to sea again, that she again began to leak, and as Captain D. states in his letter, she continued to leak 12 or 14 inches per hour during her whole voyage. We are quite sure that these facts will be regarded as affording a satisfactory explanation of the neglect to go to the relief of the burning Austria.

The Quarantine Riots.

Under the alarming and deceptive head of "The Quarantine Rioters Rested," the Post of last evening publishes the formal declaration which has been served on the Board of Supervisors of Richmond County, by the counsel of the Commissioners of Immigration, for the purpose of recovering from the county the value of the property of the State destroyed by the mob on the 1st of September. By a State law, passed April 19, 1860, (chapter 400, laws of 1860,) any county whose property may be destroyed or injured in consequence of any mob or riot may bring an action against the city or county in which such property is situated—and whenever final judgment shall have been secured against such city or county the Treasurer is directed to pay the amount of such judgment to the party or parties entitled thereto. It is required that the party sustaining such loss shall have used all due diligence to prevent the same, and shall have notified the Mayor of the city, or the Sheriff of the county, of any threats to destroy the property which may have come to his knowledge; and any officer who, after being notified of such threats, shall neglect to take all legal means to protect the property attacked or threatened, is made liable to the party aggrieved for such damages as he may have sustained, if he shall elect to bring his action against the officer instead of the city or county. Every person or corporation whose property has been destroyed may also bring and maintain an action against every person engaged in such riot or mob—this is a common law right which is expressly reserved by the fourth section of the act above quoted.

Under this act the Emigration Commissioners, as Trustees of the State, have brought an action against Richmond County to recover the value of the buildings destroyed on the 1st of September—which is stated at $[illegible], and also for those destroyed on the 3d of September, valued at $[illegible]—making over [illegible] in the aggregate. In their declaration they make the circumstances of the destruction of the property and declare that they used all diligence and diligence to prevent it.

The case has been laid in this City, and the Commissioners will endeavor to have the case brought in ordinary cases of suits for the destruction of property by riot, the trial is supposed to be held in the County where the alleged riot occurred—but it will be contended that this action, being brought under a special statute, does not come within that rule. We understand that this action has been instituted by the counsel for the Commissioners, that it was served by the Board of Health for having neglected the rioters [illegible] tion. As yet, however, no such action has been commenced.

FIRE IN HOBOKEN.—A telegram received in this City yesterday from the President of the Hoboken Ferry Company, states that a portion of their ferry-house was burned last night, and that it would be closed in this city on Monday.

CITY INTELLIGENCE.

[illegible] Society, which has [illegible] the first scholars in [illegible] in this City [illegible] the more liberal [illegible] but its energies were [illegible] that its managers found it [illegible] attempts for its recognition [illegible] of the first steps to meet that end, [illegible] was highly gratifying. Instead of ten or twelve there forty individuals were in attendance at [illegible] of the meetings, which extended through [illegible] Thursday and Friday. Among the more [illegible] members present were the Rev. Dr. Rosemond of this City, the President of the Society; and [illegible] Amherst and Geo. Foster, of Cambridge—the former the Corresponding Secretary, President [illegible], and Professors Hammond, Wesselhoeft and [illegible], representing Yale College, and Professors [illegible], Hovey, Princeton, Prof. Gibson [illegible], Brainerd, and Mr. McLean, of Lawrenceville, [illegible] also present. Quite a number of the New-York clergy attended the meetings. Among the papers read was one by Professor Wesselhoeft, on the "Relations of Physiology," and one by Dr. Henry Southgate, formerly of the City, formerly of the Arcot Mission, [illegible] Calcutta, on the "Origin of Greek [illegible]." Some views presented in the latter paper elicited considerable discussion. One of the [illegible] features of the meeting was a [illegible] from the members of the Society by the Rev. Dr. Rosemond.

[illegible] THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.—A state of [illegible] highly prosperous in the friends of this institution, set forth by the catalogue just issued. The following is the summary of students:

Senior class	26	Junior class	42
Middle Class	60	Resident Licentiates	4
Total			134

Of this number, 10 graduated at Amherst College, 17 at Williams, 10 at Yale, 6 at Dartmouth, 7 at the New-York University, 6 at Hamilton College, 4 at the Free Academy, and 12 have not had the advantages of a collegiate education. Twenty-nine hail from the New-England States. New-York State, including New-York City and Brooklyn, furnish 46. At a recent meeting of the Synod of New-York and New-Jersey, a committee was appointed to devise means of [illegible] scholarships. Their efforts have met with [illegible] success. About 50 scholarships, yielding $[illegible] per annum, are already pledged.

BOARD OF COUNTY CANVASSERS.—The members of the Board of Supervisors, who constitute the Board of County Canvassers, met at 12 M., yesterday, and were in session all the afternoon. They organized by electing ELIJAH F. PURDY, Esq., President. The canvass commenced with the First District of the City of New-York, and proceeded in numerical order. The vote for the First District of the First Ward indicated that the total number of votes polled there for Member of Congress was 193, and that SANDERS received 70 votes, WALLBRIDGE 21, and G. SLOAN WARNER 1, which added together make 192, and 32 more than the whole total set down. It was also found that of the 193 votes found in the box in which were the votes for Judge of the Superior Court were preserved, 17 were for member Conkling and in favor of SANDERS. Considerable debate followed a motion to send the return back to the Inspectors. Mr. SANDERS himself was present. Mr. [illegible] observed that this was a very good way to [illegible] the favorite ticket. Mr. SANDERS said the House of Representatives alone was competent to decide the matter; the Board of Canvassers had no jurisdiction. The motion, however, prevailed. There were, also, in this District 76 votes for SANDERS, marked "under protest." The law requires that the canvass shall be completed within ten days. During that period the Board will meet daily at noon.

GOVERNORS OF THE ALMSHOUSE.—At the meeting of the Board of Governors yesterday, a communication from the Supply Clerk was read, advising the [illegible] purchase of flour, potatoes and similar articles. Governor W. F. PASSMORE thought there was a probability of a serious rise in the price of flour. He was of opinion that it would be advisable to buy only a month's supply. Governor GUERNSEY said that at the next meeting he should enter upon his reply to a letter addressed by Dr. Jackson to the Board. A letter from Mr. Bonsteed to the effect that a contract had been made by D. Moreton, was received to be placed on the minutes. From the monthly report it appears that on Oct. 30 there were 2,[illegible] persons in the institutions. Since then 1,251 were admitted, 29 had died, 1,169 were discharged, and 60 were sent to the Penitentiary, leaving a balance on Nov. 2 of 7,[illegible], being an increase of 114 on the week ending Nov. 7 of the previous year.

HOUSE OF SUPERVISORS.—The Board of Supervisors met yesterday, prior to organizing as a Board of Canvassers. The only matter of interest before the House was another communication from the Mayor, nominating Judge HUMPHREYS a Commissioner of the New City Hall. The Board refused to confirm the nomination. This is the fifth time the Board has refused to confirm the Mayor's nominations for Commissioners of the New City Hall.

THE CITY POST-OFFICE—A TOUCHING APPEAL.—A correspondent of the Journal of Commerce, who styles himself a Democratic Merchant, addresses a very affecting remonstrance to the Postmaster-General, against the threatened removal of the City Post-Office to some point nearer the centre of population. He declares that he is a staunch and decided political friend of the Administration, and thinks the Administration is in danger of forgetting how liberally the Democratic merchants of the City have responded to every call of the Democratic Party for aid in all the elections we have been held. They think they have a right to be heard in this matter, and that their wishes should be respected. A removal of the Post-Office to any point beyond the City Hall would be productive, he says, of a most unfortunate feeling of resentment against the Administration, and he hopes "the warnings will not be thrown away. A great portion of the commercial and financial community of this City, he says, desire the Post-Office to remain where it is. The appeal is mainly based upon party grounds, and in the first attempt, so far as we have seen, to have this question, with which politics should have nothing to do, decided upon partisan considerations, and under the direct influence of party menaces. We do not think the commercial community need be alarmed, however, for we can see no evidence of any disposition on the part of the Government to do anything whatever in regard to the Post-Office.

THE LATE REV. FREDERICK CROWE.—With reference to the melancholy death of this esteemed agent of the American Bible Union have issued an address in which they say: "The late Rev. Frederick Crowe, the martyr missionary, who laid down his life in laboring to disseminate the pure Word of God in Central Spanish America, has committed a sacred trust to the hands of the lovers of Christ and the friends of civil and religious liberty in this country. His wife, a youthful Spanish Christian, converted to Christ through his instrumentality, and the sharer of his late trials and persecutions, is left among us, a bereaved stranger in a strange land. Driven from her home and friends and native country, as well for her love of the Bible and its Saviour, therein revealed, as on account of her devoted attachment to her noble-hearted husband—rendered destitute by the oppressive and persecuting tyranny of the enemies of the Truth—cast by the kind Providence of God among a Christian people—and committed in full confidence by a dying martyr to our sympathies, protection, and care, her case presents an irresistible appeal to every lover of Christ and humanity. To this appeal we feel assured the hearts of Christian hearts will respond. Donations may be addressed to"

HOUSE OF REFUGE MURDER.—Mr. BILLINGS, the keeper recently slain at the Irving House, and for some time past employed in the same capacity at the Metropolitan Hotel, has been missing since noon yesterday. His friends are unable to account for his absence except by supposing that he is suffering from temporary mental alienation, or has become the victim of foul play. When he left he wore a valuable diamond breast-pin, and a gold chronometer watch and chain, and had a small amount of money. He is five feet five inches in height, of robust build, with sandy complexion and light hair and whiskers. He was dressed in black clothes.

MILITARY FOR QUARANTINE.—The left wing of the Fifty-fifth Regiment proceeded, yesterday, by the 10 o'clock boat, to Staten Island, and relieved the right wing of the same Regiment, which has been on duty there for a week past. The usual military salutations were exchanged, and the right wing returned to the City in the 3 o'clock boat, and, escorted by the right wing of the Seventh Regiment, (National Guard,) under Lieutenant-Colonel LAWRENCE, marched to their quarters. Both Regiments looked well, and attracted a great deal of attention.

THE GOULDY FAMILY.—There has been no change in the Gouldy family since yesterday. Mr. GOULDY was somewhat better last evening. The little boy NATHANIEL is not yet out of danger. MRS. GOULDY is about the same. There is no difference in the condition of the servant girls at the City Hospital.

DROWNED.—About 6 o'clock Monday evening a "longshoreman, named WM. O'BRIEN, was accidentally drowned from on board the steamship Remsen, lying at pier No. 12 N. R. His body was recognized and taken to his late residence, corner of Washington and Cedar streets, and the Coroner notified.

CAMPHENE LAMP EXPLOSION.—MRS. LEOPOLD CHRISTENSEN, of No. 182 Willett-street, was seriously burned Monday evening by the explosion of a camphene lamp, which she was filling with the wicks lighted. The flames communicated to a bed, but were soon extinguished.

THE WEATHER.—Over 300 persons have been granted to patients for the consumption of water since last Monday.

A NEW BAPTIST CHURCH IN WILLIAMSBURGH.—The First Baptist Church in Williamsburgh, which was the scene of the late fierce proceedings in the case of Judge CULVER, has at length been divided into two equal parts, 54 against 54. The majority, which exonerated the Judge, and united in calling a council which condemned the Church, have now seceded in a body, after having obtained letters of dismission. The Pro-Slavery attitude of the Church is made one of the grounds for this step of the majority. They hired a hall, and held their first meeting on Sunday evening, which was crowded. The sermon was by the Rev. Mr. CALLICOT, of Boston. On Friday evening the seceding members meet at Tremor's Hall, to organize a "Live Anti-Slavery and Progressive Baptist Church."

THE INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.—There was a donation visit yesterday of the Brooklyn Industrial School Association and Home for Destitute Children, at which there was a very respectable attendance of the friends of the institution. We hear of some substantial donations of material aid. In the evening the Rev. WILLIAM BARRETT delivered an address.

FOUNDLING.—A male infant was left on the stoop of a house in Amity-street, near Henry, on Monday night. The babe, which was about a month old, was given in charge of Governor VANOW, of the Nursery.

THE STATE ARSENAL.—This building, situated on Portland-avenue, will be opened with appropriate ceremonies on the 24th inst.

A FRUITFUL VINE.—A correspondent states that upon a tomb-stone in the church-yard of the Reformed Dutch Church in Sleepy Hollow, near Tarrytown, he found an inscription "in memory of Capt. JOHN BUCKHOUT, who departed this life April 10, 1785, aged 103 years, and left behind him when he died 240 children and grandchildren. Also MARY, the wife of JOHN BUCKHOUT, who died Aug., 1755, aged 72 years." The church itself was erected in 1699, and is one of the oldest churches in the country. Probably few men have left behind them more direct descendants than Capt. B.

Arraignment of the Baltimore Murderers

The Criminal Court yesterday morning, says the American of Tuesday, was crowded to an extent never before witnessed in this city, all the streets in the vicinity being filled, and every avenue to the Court presented one mass of human beings, whilst it would have been impossible to have packed any more in the interior. The excitement was occasioned by the announcement that MARION CROPS and PETER CORNER, the alleged murderers of the police officer, ROBT. M. RIGGS, were to be arraigned.

At 10 o'clock the two prisoners arrived at the Court-house. The rush to see the men was immense, and it was with difficulty they could be conveyed into the Court-room. There was, however, no attempt at violence, the desire being merely to gratify their curiosity on the part of the crowd. They were finally, both being ironed, led into the court-room, and placed in the lock-up. They were evidently deeply appalled at the excitement their appearance occasioned. CORNER presented the appearance of being perfectly subdued. On his nose and right eye he bore the mark of Officer COOK's pistol, being cut and bloodshotten, whilst the expression of his countenance was such as to indicate that he felt the awfulness of his position. CROPS, however, bore a bold and undismayed front, not evincing, during the whole time of the reading of the indictment the slightest feeling or contrition.

The indictment charges them both equally in the guilt of the assassination, with a third party unknown to the Jury. Who this third party is, and what part he took in the affair is not yet known, that portion of the confession of CORNER having been suppressed by the Mayor until an arrest can be effected.

On the completion of the reading of the indictment they both pleaded not guilty, and signified their desire to have their trial proceed. The prisoners were then brought to the Clerk's table and took the oath prescribed, declaring that they could not obtain a fair and impartial trial in this Court, and praying that their cases might be removed to an adjoining County Court for trial. The prisoners were then remanded to the custody of the warden, and shortly after taken back to jail.

NIAGARA FALLS—THE ROAD TO TERMINATION POINT FALLEN AWAY.—We learn from the Hamilton Spectator that constant change, the law of nature, reigns, too, at Niagara. Every year, the outline of the wonderful cataract changes, as the mighty waters slowly but surely wear away their channel, carrying in their embrace now a small fragment, then a huge mass of rock, into the chasm below. Years ago, our readers will remember, Table Rock yielded to time, and at successive periods pieces of it have fallen. On a visit to the Falls a day or two since, we observed another change has occurred, meriting at least a passing notice. Every sight-seer must recollect the path which, commencing below the brink of the ravine on the Canada side, almost opposite Prospect House, leads beneath Table Rock, and which those who desired to go "under the sheet of falling water" used to traverse in their water-proof habiliments.

It led to Termination Rock, as a spot a long distance under the cataract was called, and the adventurer who dared air and flood to reach it, blinded by spray, deafened by the terrible roar which the beating of millions of tons of water on the rocks below produces, used to receive a certificate of having accomplished the feat. The oil-skins are yet in requisition, the guides yet demand and receive their fees, and the certificates are yet given. Termination Point, too, may yet exist. But no mortal being can visit it. It never could be seen from the shore end of the cavernous tunnel—one side rock and the other water, and the floor a combination of both—which led thither. And the path to it is now cut off. The road along which one used to grope has fallen away. One can still walk about a yard under the cataract, but then the hardiest and most courageous must pause, no further foothold is afforded, and another step would lead one to an intimate acquaintance with all mysteries which it is here forbidden us to know. Ere long, doubtless, now that the stratum of solid rock below has fallen and been pounded into clay, the upper mass will fall. And then another step will have been taken in the slow and tedious course in which Niagara has beaten its own way back from Queenstown, and is—if geologists say true—to wear itself away somewhere above Chippewa.

M. PARKER. The building was purchased a short time since by JAS. BENNARD, of the firm of BENNARD & HUTTON, importers, No. 58 Broadway. The building had just been renovated and furnished at an expense of $35,000. The fire originated from the furnace flue in the kitchen hall, and communicated to the parlor floors, at which point its progress was stayed by the exertions of the firemen. The total damage will amount to about $5,000; insured in a number of City insurance companies.

BROOKLYN INTELLIGENCE.

THE CONGRESSMAN ELECT.—A paragraph in the Evening Post of yesterday, to the effect that Mr. HUMPHREY, Congressman elect from the Second District, was seriously ill, "in consequence of the excitement of the election," caused considerable apprehension among the friends of that gentleman. His house was besieged with anxious inquirers. We are glad to state that the report is wholly unfounded. Mr. HUMPHREY is not only not unwell, but enjoys a very large measure of health, and has not been at all affected by "the excitement of election."

THE INDIAN TROUBLES.

The War Against the Apache Indians—Interesting Dispatches from Colonel Miles.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, Nov. 8, 1858.

Through the courtesy of the War Department, I am enabled to furnish you the following highly interesting extract from the dispatches of Colonel MILES, now commanding the United States troops in the field against the Navajoes. The dispatch from which the extract is made is dated at Fort Defiance, the site to which, I believe, I referred in a recent letter, as being west of New Mexico. The Colonel says:

"I have 500 men, rank and file, and 6 officers. The men opened on the 8th September at Cañon de Chelly, approximately City of Rocks. I found this awful hole in the earth without losing a single man. This Cañon is, in many places, 1,000 feet deep, even on the top look like rivers, and valleys like rain. It is not over 250 yards wide, with immense bowlders, which almost cover it, overhanging. The Indians poured their arrows into us, but before they reached us they lost their momentum, and fell harmless. Horizontally their bullets did the same thing. They rolled down immense rocks by the resistance of the atmosphere, which, however, lost and reached the bottom almost dead. It was some time after I got into this place before I found a trail to get my infantry on the top, which they did, but there they swept off the Indians like chaff. We killed 68, wounded many, and captured one. These we killed had plenty of powder and ball. Their infant was being taken into the field 2,500 warriors, many of them armed with rifles. They possess the best horses, the best and fleetest I have ever seen. Their country is a continuation of hostilities, but I think this will allay their jealousies, and I have no doubt but that every single tribe, and then we will have to go to the Florida war extended, at the cost of many millions of dollars. At this time an effective force of three hundred men would speedily end the war.

"I understand the War Department is preparing for a vigorous campaign against the Navajoes, so soon as the Spring opens, as the present season is so far spent that the troops must soon go into Winter quarters.

Correspondence of the Washington Union.

FORT DEFIANCE, N. M., Thursday, Sept. 16, 1858.

This war is going to be no child's play. These Indians, as I stated in my last letter, are numerous, brave, and wealthy. They are all well mounted and armed. The country is mountainous, and difficult to travel. Every hiding-place and ambush is known to the Indians, while the country is comparatively terra incognita to us. They have all the advantages in being the attacked. We move in columns, they in bands, and in a manner to suit themselves. The troops are provided and cooky and from the peculiar circumstances originating it, matter of discussion, I think, very far in the future. Hence I deem it important to give to his reception, and, if possible, to direct in the proper direction to public sentiment.

Gen. Garland, I hear, is coming, "I have a wife and family, and I want my children to live, any longer." He was only about 40 years old, and quite reckless. He died in thirty minutes. He leaves a wife and children.

Miscellaneous.

The Reserve Police corps in Philadelphia has appeared in a new uniform, by order of Mayor Henry. It consists of a pair of blue cloth pants, with a neat buff cord running down the outside seam, to the foot. A coat of the same color, single-breasted, with a rolling collar, and the gilt buttons impressed with the city Coat-of-Arms. A single-breasted vest of the same material, (blue cloth,) and heavy, small-metal buttons, with the Arms of the city on them; and a cloth cap, with an oil-silk covering.

The annual catalogue of Williams College is published, and from it we learn that there are 230 students: Seniors, 49; Juniors, 53; Sophomores, 58; and Freshmen, 71. The class which has just begun the course is the largest yet entered. A new gymnasium, to be built of stone, is about to be constructed, to take the place of the old one burned last June.

The Detroit Advertiser tells of a man who called on his tenant, a keeper of a restaurant, for his rent. The tenant told the landlord that he had already drank it out; whereupon the landlord—not the landlord of the drinkery—went at the windows, &c., making a grand smash. He was arrested for his conduct, and gave bonds to behave himself. He took the ground that a man can do what he pleases with his own property.

According to a letter in the St. Paul (Min.) Pioneer, the people of Dacotah have completed an independent temporary organization of their Territory, to continue until Congress shall give them the usual form of Territorial Government. State officers were appointed, a Legislature convened, laws passed, &c., and the Minnesota code of 1857 adopted.

So far, eighteen States have united upon Thursday week (25th) as a day of Thanksgiving.

The Normal School at Toronto has just graduated 607 pupils.

PICCOLOMINI AT KNOX'S HAT STORE.—Mlle. MARIE PICCOLOMINI, yesterday, took a walk down Broadway as far as old Trinity. Coming back upon the east side of that crowded thoroughfare, she stopped a moment at the corner of Fulton-street, and asked her companion what place of amusement that was where so many people were pouring in and out. She was informed that it was not a place of amusement, but a place of business—KNOX'S hat store, No. 212 Broadway. "KNOX," she repeated, "Ah! I have heard of him in Europe."

TUESDAY, Nov. 9—P. M.

On the Stock Exchange to-day the State Funds were firmer, and prices rapidly tend to the points from which they declined last week. Missouris left off this afternoon 90 ⅌ cent.; Virginias about 96, and Kentuckys 106 ⅌ cent. In the morning there were sales of North Carolinas at 98¾, and Californias at 90¼ ⅌ cent. The supply of State Stocks, generally, has been much reduced within the past six or eight weeks, by bona fide investment, large sums having been absorbed by the Trust and Savings offices and the Insurance Companies, as well as by private capitalists or money lenders. The improvement in prices to-day extended to most of the Railway Bonds dealt in actively at the Brokers' Board, but the actual business accomplished was not large. New-York Central six ⅌ cents brought 91 ⅌ cent. ex dividend, New-Jersey Central second mortgage 80, and Galena and Chicago second mortgage 92 ⅌ cent. Brooklyn City sixes sold at 101¾ ⅌ cent. The La Crosse Land Grants closed 26¼, and the Fon du Lac Land Grants recovered to 15¼ ⅌ cent. The Second Mortgages of the Milwaukee and Mississippi continue to be unfavorably influenced by the legal proceedings attempted at Milwaukee by certain judgment creditors, although the November interest upon this mortgage, and also upon the Bonds of the City of Milwaukee, loaned to the Company, was promptly paid.

On the Railway Share list, the dealings were generally firm, and a further rise of 2@2½ ⅌ cent. was made in New-York Central, from 84 to 84¾, closing 84⅞@85 ⅌ cent. Erie shares were firm at 17. Reading advanced to 52, though finally closing 51¾@51⅞ ⅌ cent. Harlem Preference Shares rose to 29¾, and Michigan Southern Guaranteed Shares to 54@54¼ ⅌ cent. There was a further recovery in Galena and Chicago of ¼@½ ⅌ cent., and almost the same in Rock Island. Michigan Southern, old stock, Michigan Central, and Cleveland and Toledo steady. Panama was firmer. Sales at 119¾ ⅌ cent., and the few transactions in Pacific Mail Shares were at the closing prices of Monday. The stock of the Milwaukee and Mississippi Company, from the same cause which affects the bonds, fell off to 13¾ ⅌ cent. yesterday, but recovered to 14@14¼ this afternoon. The shares of the Albert Company, (for quarrying and marketing free-stone from British North America,) recently introduced at the Stock Exchange Board, were dealt in at 5¼ ⅌ cent. Mr. JOHN TRAVERS is the President of the Company. The prospectus says:

"The property of the Company contains upwards of twenty millions of tons of stone, above water, of a similar in color to the new American Exchange, Continental Bank, Tiffany Building, the First Presbyterian Church, Baltimore, Pennsylvania Railroad Offices, Philadelphia, and the other buildings in New-York, Baltimore and Philadelphia. The quarries have had $150,000 expended upon them, so that 30,000 to 50,000 tons may be delivered annually. They are in first-rate working order, having been furnished with two steam-engines, fifteen cranes, machinery, railways, all needful tools and appliances. There are houses for 200 men, besides manager's house, boarding and dwelling-houses, stores, &c."

In the Money Market to-day, there is a general feeling of ease in supply at the low rates quoted yesterday: 3@4 ⅌ cent. to the Stock Brokers; 4 ⅌ cent. on short prime bills, and 5@6 ⅌ cent. on bills running 90 days to 6 months. The Foreign Exchanges for the Persia, sailing to-morrow, continued unsettled throughout the day, and the rates both on England and the Continent were still lower. The regular bankers drew at 109¼@¾ ⅌ cent. on London, and transient bank bills were done at 109¾@¼@½ ⅌ cent. Merchant bills receded to 108¾@109 ⅌ cent. France fell off to f.5.18¾@f.5.16¼ to the dollar. A fair business was done at these irregular quotations, though not sufficient to give tone to the market at the close. The weakness in rates was more decided than generally looked for at the beginning of business for this favorite steamer, and the cessation of Gold shipments through the remainder of November and also through December is deemed pretty certain.

The following is the latest in American Stocks in London, received by the Kangaroo at this port, to the 27th ult.:

The London Times says of the English Funds:

"The English Funds opened with continued dullness this morning, and remained without alteration until the afternoon, when there was a slight improvement. The first quotation of Consols for money was 96¼@¾, and they left off at 96¾@⅞ for both money and account. After regular hours a further advance of an eighth took place. There was no demand for loans, which were freely offered at 1½ ⅌ cent. Bank Stock closed at 223@225; Reduced and New Three ⅌ cents., 97@⅞; India Stock, 222@225; India Debentures, 99¾@⅞; New, 99¾@⅞; India Bonds, 10s. @13s., and Exchequer-bills, March, 37s.@40s.; June, 30s.@34s. premium."

The weekly Money circular of Messrs. DE COPPET & Co., of this market, prepared for the Persia to-morrow, remarks:

"Our Stock market has been quite active since the 1st inst., but the general tendency of prices has been downward. Quotations for State Stocks, however, have but little varied, and the decline, on the whole, has been quite insignificant, except on the shares of some of the Western Railroads, the receipts of which have decreased more than was expected. In State Stocks, Missouri Sixes have advanced ½, with large sales; Tennessee Sixes have declined ¾, and California Sevens, ½ ⅌ cent. Sales of Indiana Fives at 92; Indiana 2½ ⅌ cent. Bonds at 61, and Ohio Sixes of 1875 at 106. The new Government loan is not as firmly held as it was last week. In City and County Bonds, transactions have been unimportant. We note sales of Louisville Railroad Sixes at an advance, of Chicago Water Loan Sixes at 84¾ and interest, and of Brooklyn Sixes, San Francisco Tens and St. Louis County Sevens without change in prices. Some Milwaukee City Sevens, issued for Railroad purposes, have been sold at 50, past-due coupons included."

The following gentlemen have been made Directors for the old Fireman's Insurance Company for the ensuing year: Francis T. Luquer, President; Effingham Townsend, William Agnew, Ira Smith, William S. The proceedings against Sheriff MATTHEWS, for contempt, in the United States Circuit Court, at Cincinnati, in connection with the Ohio Life and Trust Company, were resumed on Saturday, before Judges MCLEAN and LEAVITT. Judge HOADLEY moved to discharge the rule against Mr. MATTHEWS, upon three grounds—first, for want of jurisdiction by the Court; second, because the rule was improvidently issued; and third, because no specific charges had been made against him to which he could answer. Mr. STANBERY replied, contending that the Sheriff, by his answer to the demand of the Receiver, simply decides the question of jurisdiction of the Courts. Mr. S. denounced such a principle as a perfect absurdity. Counsel's own statement showed the position of the Sheriff to be wrong. He simply answered that this Court had no jurisdiction—a question which he was not competent to decide. Judge CALDWELL, for the Sheriff, supported the argument of his associate, Judge HOADLEY. At the conclusion of the argument of Judges CALDWELL, the authorities quoted, together with the papers in the case, were submitted to the Court. Mr. STANBERY suggested that the points involved required careful consideration, and proposed that the Judges reserve their decision until Monday morning. Judge MCLEAN stated that the questions at issue had not been argued with that degree of diligence or examination that had been anticipated. The Court was somewhat taken by surprise. It would be more satisfactory to the Judges to look into the proceedings in Chancery, the points of which had not been presented full enough by counsel. After further discussion amongst the counsel, further hearing in the case was postponed until Friday morning, Nov. 12. In the Superior Court, Judge SPRIGG ordered that the charges against the defendants, N. C. MCLEAN, and J. P. KILBRETH, in the case of SPINNING & BROWN, against the Ohio Life Insurance and Trust Company, upon which the rule to show cause why they should not be attached for contempt, is predicated, be stated in writing; and that W. B. CALDWELL, Esq., and GEORGE C. HOADLEY, Esq., counselors of the Court, be appointed to prepare the said charges; and when the same are prepared, that a copy be furnished to said defendants. "IN the case of N. C. MCLEAN, who has been summoned to show cause why he should not be attached, as set forth in the order heretofore made in this case, Mr. MCLEAN appears and asks that further time be allowed him to answer the process issued against him. Therefore, further time is granted until Monday, the 8th inst., at 10 o'clock A. M."

The Boston Post, in its weekly review, remarks that:

"Money is as easy and as cheap as ever. Five and six months' paper has recently been taken by the bankers at 4½ ⅌ cent. General business is dull, from the season, the weather and the times. Sterling Exchange is heavy at about the specie point for the "crackest" bills, but considerably below it for bills that are really as good as the best. New-York funds are in fair supply, and the banks hold nearly nine and a half millions of specie."

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

On several occasions I have noticed in your paper articles in relation to the sales of Real Estate at Auction, which tend to injure the business reputation of the auctioneer, as well as the sheriff or referee under whose direction they are made, in stating that foreclosure sales are unjustly conducted. Such is not the case. It is true that it sometimes occurs that the property cannot be accurately located from the description given in the legal notice. But whose fault is it? Surely not the fault of the referee or the sheriff, nor yet of the auctioneer by whom the sale is made, (we never said it was the fault of either—EDS.,) nor must we condemn the law in relation to such sales, (NOR CONSTRUE.) The defendant is, I think, alone to blame. The description of the property as given in the legal notice is taken from the mortgage given by the defendant, where he should have it correctly described.

Again, the defendant is notified of the sale, and if he will not incur the trifling expense required to give the sale full publicity, it surely cannot be expected that the plaintiff, who has been compelled to foreclose in order to recover the money he has advanced, will do it. It may be argued that he [Qu., defendant] has not the ability to pay the expense of so doing; but in that case it would, I think, be an easy matter for him to see the plaintiff in the suit, or his attorney, and make arrangements with them to have the expense deducted from the proceeds of the sale.

The above is a simple statement of the facts in the case, and it is but justice to parties interested in such sales that they should be correctly understood.—M. W.

REMARKS.—We have never written a line that calls for a word of reply from any auctioneer, referee or sheriff in the City, yet we give one of them a full hearing, and simply reiterate our own opinion that the law should never authorise or permit a compulsory sale of real estate without also requiring three things: First—That the property shall be clearly and accurately located, and fully described; Secondly—That it shall be—thus located and described—advertised six times each in three daily papers of the largest circulation in the City; Thirdly—That maps shall be got up, locating and describing the property, and the same be posted up in the Exchange at least one week before the sale, and be freely supplied to the buyers on the day of sale. And we repeat again, if our representatives at Albany this Winter do not have this matter properly attended to, they will grossly neglect their duty.
